Letters TO THE EDITOR

ON EDWARD SAID

"Earth, receive an honored guest," Auden once wrote of Yeats. Last week, the world laid Edward Said to rest. Said, who was born in Jerusalem and taught literature at Columbia University for four decades, died after a long battle with leukemia.

Progressive communities in Eugene and elsewhere owe a lasting debt to this man. First, in his book Orientalism, he developed a systematic critique of traditional Western knowledge and views about Asian societies. He showed that European scholars and officials presented the East (be it China, India, or the Arab world) as passive, exotic, and inferior. This Orientalist view enabled Western powers to justify the subjugation and colonization of the Orient. His scholarship unveiled the academic imperialism at our universities, which have not been the same since.

Said was also the most eloquent American spokesman for Palestinian statehood. When he began to lecture and write on behalf of the cause, many educated people denied that Palestinians even existed. He told the history and voiced the aspirations of the Palestinian people, whom he called "victims of the victims." No one, he believed, should be discriminated against based on his or her religion. Today, even George W. Bush recognizes the Palestinian right to self-determination.

Finally, he was an independent and a humanist. He advocated writing in alternative media. An outstanding musician, he taught music to a group of Israeli and Arab children with conductor Daniel Barenboim. He believed that no human being should be stripped of their land, national identity or culture, no matter what the cause. By the same token, he quoted Theodor Adorno's dictum that "it is part of morality not to be at home in one's home." I think many Eugene citizens share that feeling about our country.

These are sad times. The war on Iraq, racial profiling of Middle Eastern students, and escalating hate-crimes against Muslims in America, are partly the result of Orientalists who spout racist "us against them" diatribes in government and the media. That some Oregonians receive a more tolerant view in their local paper, would have pleased him dearly.

DUCKING THE TRUTH

Alan Pittman's article "Conspiracy Theories" (9/11) was interesting, even if it did trail off into an incoherent conclusion. In his drive to be "objective," Mr. Pittman sums up his piece on the most explosive political issue of our time by posing lamely, "Forty years from now, will 9/11 questions have finally been put to rest?". Wow, think about it.

Good journalism does more than simply list arguments and counter-arguments. I found it striking how critics of 9/11 conspiracy theories — at least according to Pittman's reporting — simply denied the issue rather than engaging any of its substance. The entire counter-argument, it seems, is based on the authority of those making it. If Norman Solomon says there's nothing to it, well then there must not be anything to it — inconvenient facts be damned. Didn't the Pentagon call it "stupid"? Case closed.

It is Pittman's choice not to examine this peculiarity of the debate that dooms his article to end in a shambles of pronouncements over the general nature of conspiracy theories. Newsflash: There's absolutely no doubt that the events of 9/11 resulted of a conspiracy. The questions relate to who was involved, and to what extent. Nineteen men didn't spontaneously find themselves hijacking four jetliners on the same morning. They, and others, conspired. While Pittman raises the issue of American involvement, he for some reason fails to actually engage it.

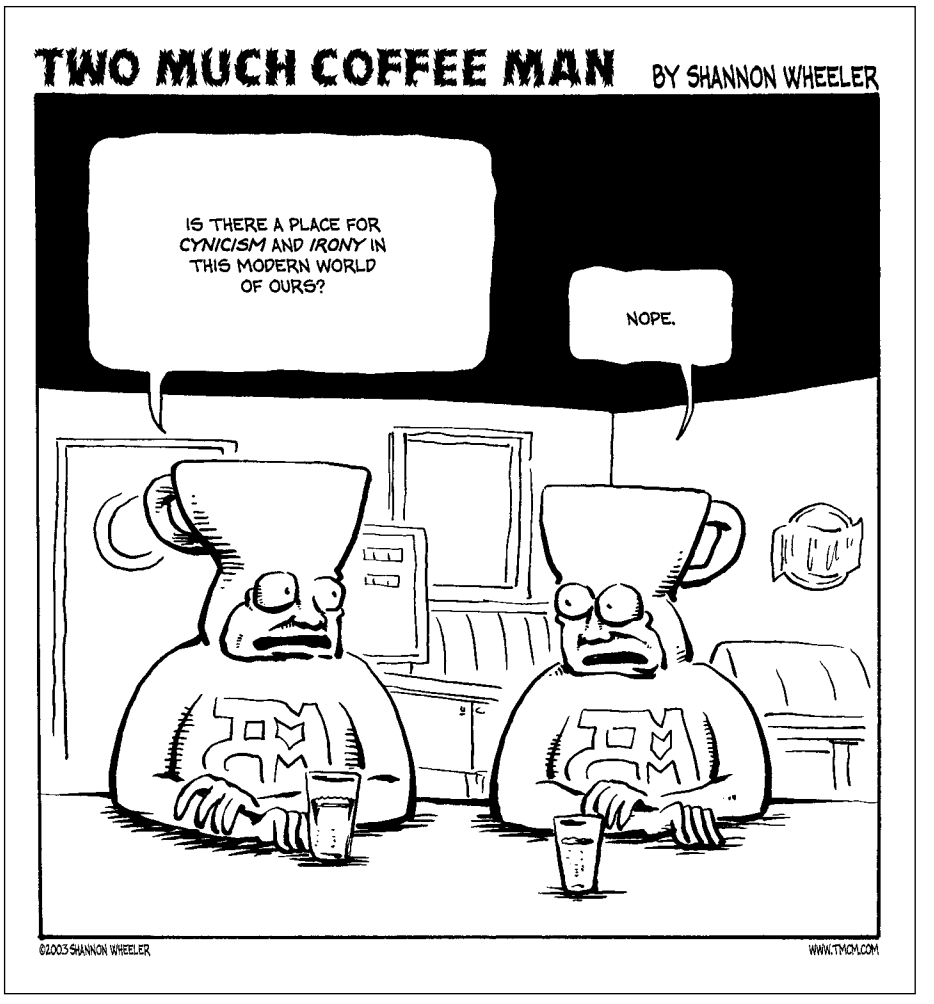

Pittman's pale didactic summation does nothing more than inform readers of the obvious. Of course some conspiracies are real and some are not. The question is not about the nature of conspiracy theories, but about whether the leadership of this country is in fact its greatest enemy. We should not get distracted by knowledge that elements of our own government are either orchestrating or allowing domestic terrorism?

It's quite telling that EW devotes more resources every single week to Ducks Illustrated than it did to exploring the staggering possibility that the current administration is actually orchestrating mass murder and civil disaster to solidify its grasp on power.

Kumbaya Dammit BY DAN CAROL

Apollo's Appeal

A security strategy to feel good about.

EDITOR'S NOTE: In response to that constant question we're hearing — "What can I do to defeat George Bush?" — EW offers a new column aimed at November 2004. The author is Dan Carol, Eugenean who founded Carol/Trevelyan Strategy Group (www.ctsg.com), the left's leading laboratory for political engagement and experimentation. CTSG, with offices in Eugene and Washington, D.C., is a 10-year-old, 60-person political consultancy specializing in communications strategy, grassroots and the Internet. CTSG's clients and partners include Moveon.org, Amnesty International USA, Working Assets, SEIU, the Drug Policy Alliance, the Natural Resources Defense Council, and Rock the Vote. Carol started the firm after serving as research director for the Democratic National Committee during the '92 presidential cycle, where he directed staff work on the party's platform and worked in Little Rock on the Clinton debate team. As a pioneer of new generation politics and issues marketing, Carol built the first U.S. Senate website in 1994, led an independent effort to derail Ollie North's Senate ambitions, served as a "truth squad" leader at three GOP conventions, and was profiled by the Wall Street Journal in 2000. When he isn't annoying the Bushies with projects like Misleader.org, Carol has taught political science at UO, co-coached fourth grade hoop stars at Edison elementary school, and assisted school funding campaigns in Eugene. His full "Kumbaya Dammit" rap for progressive reform in Nation magazine can be read on www.kumbayadammit.com

Welcome to the progressive no-whining zone. A place you can visit, every two weeks or so, to connect to smart projects and new pathways to power.

The bottom line: We know 10 times over what's wrong with George Bush, weenie Democrats and all that jazz. So let's stop documenting the dilemmas — and instead begin pouring concrete on a new foundation to make it right.

This time: a national security strategy to feel good about.

Ready for regime change? I bet you are. But it's not going to happen if we can't make the majority of Americans feel safe.

Fortunately, there' s a new project called The Apollo Alliance that's baking up a tasty new recipe for clean energy, national security and jobs, jobs, jobs.

Imagine spending serious money — like George Bush does for tax cut trillions and Halliburton handouts — on an ambitious 10-year, $300 billion effort for sustainable jobs, cleaner manufacturing, youth and urban apprenticeships and smarter transportation. The program pays for itself with jobs and greater energy independence in U.S. exports. Revitalizes the U.S. manufacturing base. Creates three million jobs. Heals labor vs. environmental grouchiness over Arctic drilling. Fuels the hopeful, can-do spirit that put America on the moon. And maybe even inspires the right kind of patriotism.

So what's not to like? In polls, the Apollo initiative is testing off the charts with Joe Six-Pack voters — the voting block we need to win crucial Rust Belt states like Ohio, Pennsylvania and Michigan in 2004. On the campaign trail, Democratic presidential candidates are offering dueling Apollo-type policy plans. Across the country, high-tech and environmental leaders like the Sierra Club's Carl Pope are also joining 17 major unions in saying yes to the Apollo approach.

Slowly, but surely, the political wedge that George Bush drove between labor and environment is beginning to close. That's good news — because we need Turtles and Teamsters to march together in 2004 (like they did in Seattle in 1999).

Frankly it still amazes me that neither Bush nor the Democrats in Congress stepped forward with an ambitious crash effort like this before. It seemed like such a no-brainer in the wake of Sept. 11th.

Call me nostalgic, but I remember my grandfather sharing stories of how he saved aluminum foil in World War II. I am inspired by the images of Rosie the Riveter. I believe we must fight terrorism — but the fight begins when we come together around a shared vision of hope and optimism — not the fear that fuels the Bush policies.

Sappy I know, but I think the greatest generation is yet to come.

So check out www.apolloalliance.org — there's a top-flight, 10-point policy plan and a bottom-up, grassroots strategy for infusing these ideas into the presidential debate in key primary states like Iowa.

For you policy wonks, imagine big block grants to deficit-starved states, to seed regional strategies without a one-size-fits-all solution, tied to hard targets and caps on greenhouse gas emissions. But before the laws can change or the money can move, first we gotta win — and Apollo is the winning (not whiny!) message for Democrats in 2004.

troversy. I hope that the feds build the access ramp, but cancel the rest of the building. I don't see a need for this Homeland Security complex. The existing federal courthouse is adequate to prosecute federal violations, especially if we restore our Bill of Rights by repealing the so-called PATRIOT Act.

A second topic: the "anyone but Bush" mantra. While I support immediate impeachment of the entire Bush regime, the real issue is ending imperial policies, not merely replacing the figureheads in the White House. Dean supports Bush's obscene military spending increases. In contrast, Kucinich wants to cut the bloated military budget to fund human needs. Kucinich is the only candidate talking about the Pentagon's missing trillion dollars, something that Coward Dean does not discuss. Dean merely has tactical differences with Bush regarding the conduct of the US empire. See www.kucinichdeancompare.com for the details.

Any Democratic candidate can only beat Bush if the phony electronic "touch screen" voting machines being installed from coast to coast are withdrawn and actual ballots (counted by hand) are used in 2004. Otherwise, there will be a repeat of the 2002 Georgia election, where the conservative Democrat governor and senator, both expected to win (according to the polls) suddenly had a massive drop in their support on election day.

There is no way to verify the results of an election using touch screen ballots — and it is not a coincidence that these disputes all favor Republicans, since Republicans make these machines. Kucinich is the only Democratic presidential candidate to express concern about this new form of vote fraud.

LETTER FROM A POODLE

I loved the letter of Mitzi Linn (9/25) chastising EW for having an Oregon football insert, blaming football for contemporary international problems. First, she probably writes using a pen name (I do not find her in the telephone book), because only miniature poodles are called Mitzi.

Mitzi, I am sorry your undies are in a knot over sports. Having served on the UO Alumni Association Board, I know well the benefit to student and academic programs of the UO sports programs. Simply put, Mitzi: Joey Harrington and Luke Ridnour translate into thousands of dollars in donations to student and academic programs, at a time of legislative non-support.

I am pleased that no football fan wrote EW protesting EW's appropriate expansive coverage of the Oregon Country Fair.

Relax, sweetie.

David Jensen
Eugene/Vida

EDITOR'S NOTE: For the record, Mitzi is a real person (one of several upstanding local citizens with that name); in addition, we know of at least one ankle-biter poodle named Dave.

CRYING FOWL

There are few certainties in life. We know the standard, death and taxes, are things upon which we can rely. But there is another, that I have found, a guarantee if you will. As soon as I had the pleasure of seeing the Oregon Ducks insert in EW, I knew, for a fact, that there would be people crying fowl (I could not resist the pun, forgive me) in you're Letters section. Sure enough, Mitzi Linn (9/25) has the honor of being this week's crybaby. I can't help but laugh when I see such foolishness.

This person has the gall to equate football with our enemies' perception of us. This "football drug fix" she speaks of, brings in gobs of money to the university. This money helps fund the arts and academics that the UO is known for. These new multi-million dollar buildings that are springing up around campus, just where does she think the funding is coming from? Seems to me the only "drug" she needs to worry about is the one that is obviously distorting her perception of reality. Do us a favor Miss Linn, keep slapping those "Free Tibet" stickers on your bumper, at least you can make believe your making a difference. Or, here is a novel idea, get off your butt, and champion a real cause!

STICK TO THE PLAN

The Healthy Forest Restoration Act is an attempt by the Bush administration to roll back the environmental protections of the Northwest Forest Plan and the continued logging of old-growth forests on public land.

The Northwest Forest Plan protects water quality, salmon habitat, rare and endangered species associated with ancient forests. The national forests are owned by the public — by you and me — a public who believes that old forests, salmon, wildlife and our water need protection.

As the agencies managing public land, the Forest Service and the BLM actions should reflect public opinion. So I urge everybody to stop this proposal and defend the Northwest's heritage by speaking out loud!

COLD COMFORT

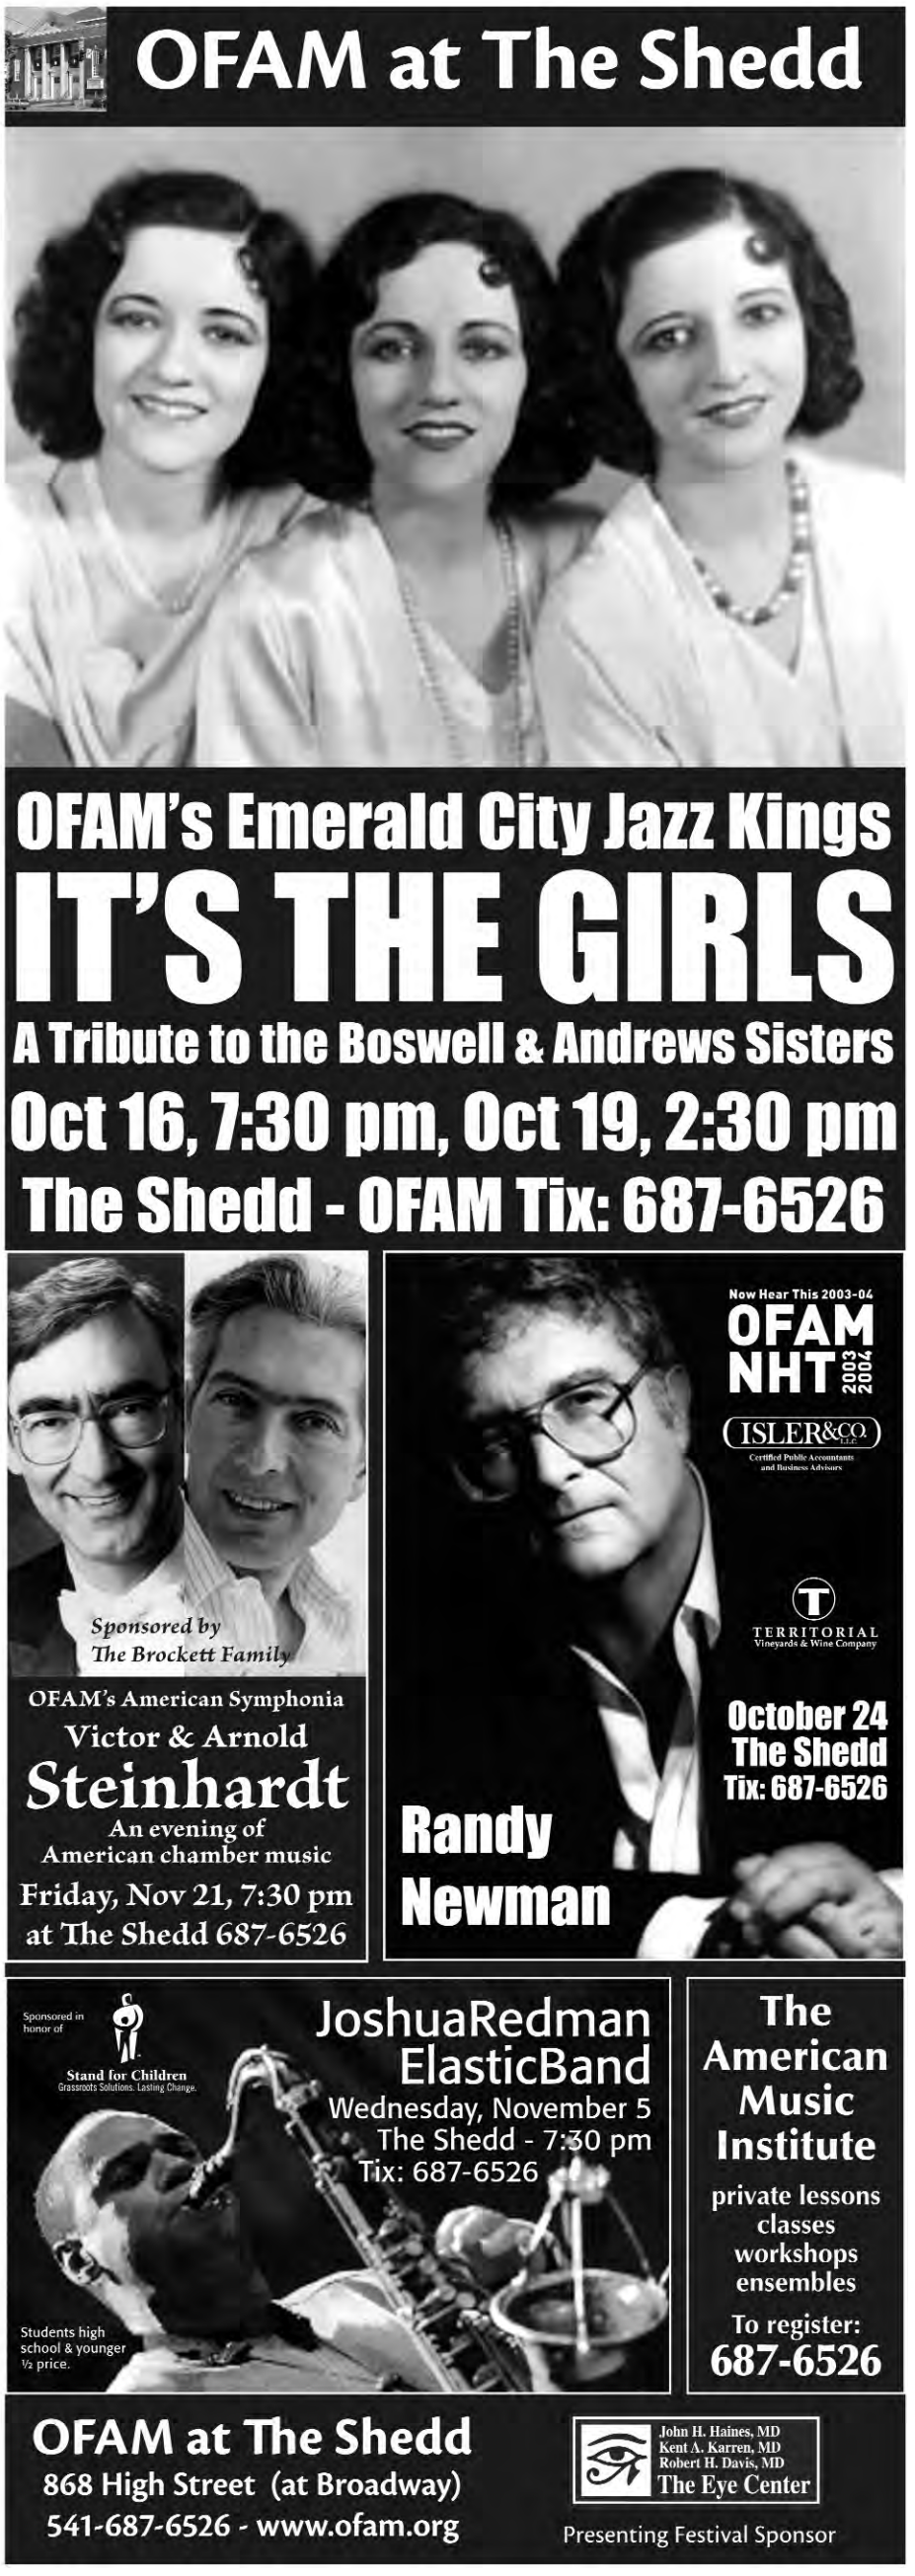

I'll vote for Kucinich in the primary and general elections, even if I have to write his name in. He seems to be the only one that represents new ideas. Yes, this is a critical time, not a time for business as usual. Dean seems rather like another Gore, and I see nothing outstanding about the rest. They're all looking to gain the advantage of more money. Everyone on the left seems to be saying Kucinich is good, yet, being short on money, has zero chance of winning. If this is so, what's the point of paying any attention to elections? Maybe it's time to make more aggressive responses to corruption. But here's another low probability.

The chances of my one vote actually affecting a presidential election are insignificant (though not zero), especially with the electoral college and other corruptions, as was certainly true when I voted for Nader the last two times. But the votes are reported, at least for significant candidates. Minority votes still send a message of who and what we really want, which may someday affect what candidates the Demolicans support.

If the Republicans dare to support Bush again, and by chance and corruption he stays in, I feel his excesses may wake us up to the corruption of capitalism, consumerism and corporatism and help to put an end to them, hopefully before they completely destroy the earth's ecosystems.

Anyway, maybe hell has freezers, and even a snowball does have a chance.

Oregon's Daughters

'Oh Girls' calendar not licensed by UO office.

If you have a daughter attending the UO, you may want to flip through the new "Oh Girls" calendar; lucky you, she might be in it.

Produced by Zach Patterson, a recent graduate of the UO Lundquist School of Business, the "Oh Girls" calendar features "Maxim style" images of young UO students in suggestive outfits, glazed in soap, relaxing on hay-bales and getting it on in hot tubs.

Well, "getting it on" may be a little misleading, as the calendar contains no full nudity, but if "getting it on" means, "Look at me and mentally masturbate," or "Here's what women are good for," then the "Oh Girls" calendar is definitely getting it on.

Initially, said Patterson, the calendar was slated for a UO logo license. Patterson's June concept pitch, more cutesy, less racy than the final "Oh Girls" product, to the UO Office of Trademark Management (OTM) included women in UO clothing, with UO props, with a UO title, to be sold, hopefully, at the UO Bookstore.

Despite a rejection by the UO, "Oh Girls" did in fact make it onto UO Bookstore shelves, for approximately an hour and a half on Tuesday, Sept. 30. Then the bookstore got a call from the UO "requesting" the calendars be pulled. They were, immediately, and in an effort of good faith, Patterson bought them back.

In an attempt to discover why the product had not been given the UO go-ahead, Anita Nickell, the assistant director of the OTM, told me, "The only thing I can tell you is that has not come through our office as a licensed product."

To further describe my scintillating phone conversation with Nickell, I should say she also added, "It has not been licensed by this office," "I can only tell you that it hasn't been licensed by this office" and, "That calendar did not come through as such, no."

In an attempt to dig a bit deeper, I spoke with the director himself, Matt Dyste, who cleared things up with, "That product was not licensed by the University of Oregon."

So "Oh Girls" didn't get licensing. Therefore, Patterson altered the product. He told the models (some were friends and others were referred to him by word of mouth) that the calendar wasn't going to be licensed but they were going to go ahead anyway, make it sexier and take out all the references that would lead one to believe it was a licensed product. And as before, payment to the women models would still be nothing, except, of course, the salute of an occasional frat-room grunt.

Patterson has been selling "Oh Girls" on 13th Avenue, with what one reporter described as a humongous wad of cash in his pocket.

While the calendar's primary colors are yellow and green, and the students are from the university and the title of the calendar is the "Oh Girls," Dyste gave Patterson a letter asking him to voluntarily stop selling the calendar, as they were concerned the product design could possibly infringe on UO licensing and trademarks. Though Patterson had a lawyer respond with a letter of their own, saying, as Patterson put it, "Leave me alone," Patterson hopes the UO Bookstore — which is very concerned with the opinions of the OTM — will still carry "Oh Girls" — and "Oh Guys" in 2004.

So, if you're at all worried that your little darling is hiding something from you but nothing from others, Zach Patterson, who said, "I wanted all the pictures to be something the girls would feel fine about showing to their families," is selling the calendars on 13th Avenue on campus. EW

ARBITRARY JUSTICE

The loss of ethics in our judicial system should be noted. Due process in our civil courts is long gone for the working classes. Common interest groups like insurance companies and large business have removed your civil rights to sue under the due process of law, by convincing lawmakers that arbitration is the way to settle the working class claims against consumer fraud, auto accidents and civil liability claims. The arbitrator is a person selected to judge a dispute as in collective bargaining negotiations. Arbitration is based on one's preference, notion or whim and not by due process of law.

This is a dictatorial system set up by large business and insurance companies where conflict of interest laws do not apply; in fact, where no laws apply and judgment is done on the preference of those chosen to arbitrate. The arbitrating law firms have interest in these companies and volunteer their time and their insurance lawyers to be on the arbitrator list that is used to select a referee or umpire for settlement. They do not have to follow the laws set out by our courts and are only required to use their own preference to make judgment on the working classes. These arbitrators have and continue to act in favor of large companies, ignoring the laws set out by the state and federal government to favor their own common interest.

You have no civil right to sue in a fair and balanced court system anymore because it was taken away from the working class long ago by large companies and insurance giants.

TWO WRONGS, NO RIGHT

I'd like to add further contemplation to the letter of Jeffrey Stout (9/18) regarding field burning. It appears to me that he's willing to accept field burning as harmless in light of the fact that Americans are emitting more harmful pollutants via the automobile. Do we have to accept more pollution because we are already encumbered with auto exhaust? Why can't we address both issues as something requiring change?

Admittedly, the car is deeply ingrained in our lifestyles, but by raising public awareness and working towards alternative fuels, we can hopefully reduce these emissions over time.

I'd also like to challenge Jeffrey's view of field burning as benign. He states that "farmers produce something through their field burning." I'm curious if he realizes that grass seed is distributed via trucks and planes, or that grass is usually mowed by lawn mowers (which are not clean burning engines). There is also the fact that the grass fields as well as their product (lawns) are often sprayed with commercial fertilizers and herbicides which usually contain lead and mercury as well as other harmful chemicals.

I was curious about the airborne particulates from fields that are sprayed with these products and then burned. LRAPA said that we no longer tested the air for lead and never have for mercury. To add insult to injury, a majority of these "farms" are owned by multinational Dutch companies. My European friends tell me that Europe doesn't allow field burning. Welcome to the third world, Oregon!

POVERTY IS WEALTH

On Sept 27, The Register-Guard reported that the number of people living in poverty in the U.S. has increased by 1.7 million.

Earlier, when the liberal media reported the dropping value of the dollar, it was necessary for the White House to clarify that this is a good thing because it reduces the cost of U.S. goods for our remaining international customers. Now the liberal media will be using the increase in poverty to claim mismanagement of the economy. It is therefore crucial to explain why the increase in poverty is, in fact, also a good thing.

First, the poor pay little or no income taxes. As our president has patiently explained, reducing federal tax revenues is always good, regardless of current economic conditions.

Second, poverty is good for industry. Ask any CEO what the greatest cost to his business is and he will tell you: workers, salaries and benefits. The poor and unemployed are willing to work for less, which reduces costs and in turn increases corporate profits.

Third, the poor are far more willing to work in unpleasant or hazardous conditions, and having someone working these jobs is essential for the comfortable lifestyles of the rest of us. Also, having a large of pool of desperate Americans decreases the need to hire immigrant labor, which in turn reduces the desire of foreigners to sneak into our country.

Fourth, the poor spend almost all their income in day-to-day expenses. That is, the poor channel their modest incomes back into the local economy and credit firms. While the wealthy obviously spend more money, much of their income is locked up in savings. When adjusted for their net worth, the poor contribute proportionally more to the economy.

In short, the growing poverty in our country is another sign that our president is doing a fine job with the economy. To claim otherwise is unpatriotic.

BUSHWHACKED BUILDING?

Rumor has it that the Eugene federal building was secretly delayed to help pay for Bush's warmongering. The Bush administration is hiding the diversion of money from Oregon to Iraq by blaming Eugene for not supporting the project.

Other nonessential pork-barrel projects have been delayed. For example, it was publicly announced that money designated after 9/11 for airport security research would be cut to reduce Bush's record budget deficit. In effect, Bush is diverting research dollars from universities, such as OSU and UO, to pay for war. Bush doesn't want to fund them [sic] intellectual elitist "terrorists" anyway.

Bush, in addition to reducing his deficit, is probably using these delays to extort votes from congressmen such as DeFazio. Our local "fair and balanced" (trademark of Fox News Corporation) media has failed to investigate how Bush's trickery is hurting Oregon.

THE REPUBLICRITES

I recently found out that there is a candidate for office who has a history of smoking pot (and inhaling!), using steroids to enhance his appearance, group sex, groping women, and lying about his past. No, it's not a Kennedy or a Clinton, it's Arnold Schwarzenegger!

Where is the outrage from the right-wing crypto fascists on cable news? How come Ann Coulter hasn't written about this scandal? Why aren't conservative demagogues like Pat Robertson, Jerry Falwell, Bill O'Reilly, Neil Cavetto, and Pat Buchanan railing about the "character" issue that was so important during the Clinton scandal? Where is the outrage?

Ooops! I just remembered: "Ah-nuld" is a Republican! Oh, those hypocritical conservatives! They out to rename their party the "Republicrites."

FOR THE KIDS

Ah, Oregon, what a cash-cow rich place it is. The Legislature made national news paying and costing itself all the overtime for its terminal late sessions, which brewed two seizures of non-voluntary funds: the first an outright tax increase and the other a single issue ballot measure to fund a criminal theft of money that is bankrupting the state on a lifetime basis with no termination date. Even with the new bond measure it will continue to force the children who can't vote today to pay for it tomorrow. Oregon has found a way to tax the children of the future.

It is alleged that the bond measure has been voted into law, yet everyone knows that bonds are paid back by taxes and under the tax laws of Oregon there wasn't the necessary number of voters to pass a tax measure on the youth of Oregon.

Then there is the nature of the contestable punch card ballots used in this county which have already been deemed by a federal court as a civil rights violation during the ballot measure vote. Which leads us to the director of our local voting system who has been quoted in print saying that if `necessary, there were tricks that could be done with the vote to help pass any civil tax increase measure.

There is nothing like employment security with a guaranteed 8 percent a year retirement increase to protect an ongoing crime against the youth of Oregon.

It's "for the kids," don't you know? We love you to death!

Lane County Planning Commission
Public Hearings and Citizen Information Work Sessions

Public hearings on Lane County's Periodic Review Work Program in the Siuslaw Watershed and Long Tom Watershed are scheduled for:
- October 21, 2003 (Tuesday) at 7:00 P.M. in Harris Hall, Lane County Public Service Building, 125 E. 8th, Eugene; and
- November 4, 2003 (Tuesday) at 7:00 P.M. in Mapleton High School, East Mapleton Road, Mapleton.

There will be two citizen information work sessions prior to the public hearings. The information work sessions are scheduled for:
- October 14, 2003 (Tuesday) at 6:30 P.M. in Mapleton High School, East Mapleton Road, Mapleton; and
- October 16, 2003 (Thursday) at 6:30 P.M. in Fern Ridge Middle School, 88831 Territorial Road, Elmira.

Signs will be posted at the school entrances to inform citizens of the specific locations of the meetings within the school buildings.

An information packet is available in Lane County Land Management Division that includes staff reports and proposed amendments to Lane County Rural Comprehensive Plan Policies and Lane Code Chapter 16 regulations that are being considered for adoption as part of the Periodic Review Work Program in the Siuslaw Watershed and Long Tom Watershed.

The proposed amendments to Lane Code include:

Lane Code 16.292: Rural Industrial Zone (RI, RCP) --
Lane Conservation & Development Commission rulemaking to OAR 660-22-030(3) and (11) "Unincorporated Community Rule" amending standards for "small-scale, low impact" development of Rural Industrial sites.
Lane Code 16.400: Plan Amendments (RCP) --
House Bill 2614 amending plan amendment processes for rezoning abandoned or diminished mill sites to Rural Industrial without taking exceptions to statewide Goals 3 (Agricultural), 4 (Forest), 11 (Public Facilities), or 14 (Urbanization); and allowing industrial development; and Lane Code 16.292: House Bill 2614 providing for extension of sewer systems and development of mill sites in Rural Industrial Lands west of the summit of the Coast Range.
Lane Code 16.291: Rural Commercial Zone (RC, RCP) --
Clarifying limitation for establishing new community sewer systems. Discussion on current development standards and housekeeping revisions to the Rural Commercial regulations.
Lane Code 16.232: Destination Resort (DR, RCP) --
Implementing Oregon Revised Statutes (ORS) 197.435 - 197.467 for the siting and operation of destination resorts.
RCP Goal 2: Errors or Omission Policy 27 --
Reinstating an errors or omission policy in the Goal Two Plan Policies of the Rural Comprehensive Plan.
Preliminary Compliance Report --
Addressing OAR 660-22-030 criteria and standards; and Unincorporated Community Reports --
Siuslaw Watershed (Glenada, Cushman, Mapleton, Swisshome, Deadwood, Greenleaf, Triangle Lake, Blachly and Walton). Long Tom Watershed (Lancaster, Franklin, Cheshire, Alvadore, Elmira, Noti, Crow and Lorane).

LANE COUNTY OREGON

natural resistance BY MARY O'BRIEN

Wise Collaboration

It's remarkable what groups can accomplish.

A few years back, singer/songwriter Arlo Guthrie offered this encouragement at one of his concerts: "In a world that sucks — like this one does — you don't have to do a lot to make a difference."

While preparing a handout for an Environmental Citizenship and Leadership class at Whitman College recently, I came to a related conclusion: To accomplish something that is significantly more socially or environmentally respectful than what is going on, just coordinate with enough people, wisely, for long enough.

The class handout I was working on was a list of different environmental campaigns I've been privileged to be a part of during the past 22 years. In many campaigns, my role was tiny compared to others, I worked pretty hard in some others, and I was one of the ringleaders in a few. But the amazing thing was that we had succeeded in almost all of the 21 campaigns I was remembering.

Obviously, we haven't succeeded in bringing human population numbers or energy consumption within the bounds of Earth's resources. We haven't succeeded in restoring habitat needed by the amazing creatures that were winging through air, navigating oceans, or hiking around on land in large numbers, say, 200 years ago. We haven't prevented the heartbreaking rise of childhood cancer and pre-birth damage caused by toxics in human tykes, salmon fingerlings, or any other of Earth's kids. (Yesterday I received a note from a friend. Her 13-year-old daughter, having struggled through 2.5 years of chemotherapy for acute lymphocytic leukemia, is now battling a secondary leukemia caused by the chemotherapy.) The world is, ecologically speaking, moving at a brisk pace toward hell in a handbasket.

But what I realized while preparing this handout was that nearly all the campaigns had succeeded: Electing an anti-herbicide school board majority and developing processes for alternative grounds management. Writing and passing a state groundwater law. Stopping in Australia what was to be the world's largest chlorine-using pulp mill. Stopping what was to be the 10th chlorine-using pulp mill on the Columbia River. Preventing aerial spraying of toxic pesticides over Lane County for gypsy moth. Co-founding Environmental Law Alliance Worldwide. Writing and passing the only local materials accounting toxics right-to-know law in the nation. Preventing the development of five large drive-in overlooks and a 10-year series of clearcuts on the western rim of Hells Canyon. Vastly reducing the use of herbicides in the national forests of western Oregon and Washington. Protecting high-class farmland on the banks of the Willamette River from being mined illegally for gravel. Protecting the Willamette Valley's last wet prairie wetlands from an unneeded five-lane highway. Co-founding MADelk and halting the importation of elk to elk ranches in Oregon. Co-founding Oregon Toxics Alliance. Switching the destruction of U.S. nerve gas weapons from out-of-control toxic incineration to water-based neutralization at three U.S. sites. And so on.

Along the way, there were some "losses" and it's not yet clear whether we'll succeed soon at a few other, ongoing efforts. But many of the losses were later turned into successes, by persevering around the temporary obstacles.

None of these successes would have been possible without many, many people coordinating on many, many tasks over a long period of time. None of them, in other words, were accomplished by one or two egos acting alone, and none happened quickly or easily.

The point, though, is that no matter how bleak the situation, citizens can and do make a difference on behalf of social decency (in contrast, but not opposition, to personal decency), environmental sanity and democracy. We owe the 40-hour work week, unions, civil rights, wilderness, National Parks, Social Security, Medicaid, our ongoing democratic system, the National Environmental Policy Act, the Endangered Species Act — indeed, everything that lifts us up above naked exploitation, greed, and short-term profit — to people who worked together, wisely, for a long time.

And that's what it will take to reverse the current and terrifying undermining of everything other than the military that is public, such as public lands, health, social supports, water, and education; the undermining of civil rights, transparent democracy, international rules about waging war, progressive taxation — you name it. That's what it will take to restore older and institute newer ways of taking care of the whole world: people working together, wisely, for a long time.

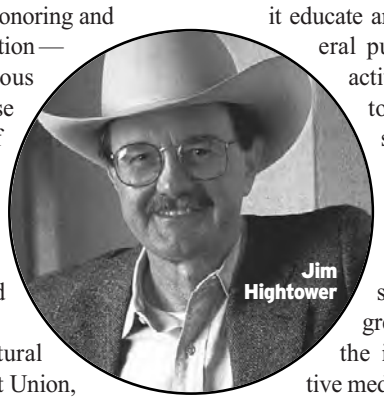

But be assured your help is needed. Those who promote naked exploitation, greed and short-term profit are working together, too.

INDIGENOUS SOLIDARITY MARKS COLUMBUS DAY

The celebrations at UO's EMU amphitheater and the WOW Hall on Monday, Oct 13, will not be honoring Christopher Columbus and the arrival of his three ships in North America in the 15th century. Rather, the focus of Indigenous Solidarity Day will be on the colonization that came in Columbus' wake, and the survival of native cultures in the world today.

"It's a nationwide event that a lot of indigenous people celebrate, and it's kind of a 'take back the day' idea in that it's an event that is against colonization and honoring and respecting the history of colonization — what has happened to indigenous people all over the world because of it," says Jana Schmieding of the Native American Student Union, "and it's also a celebration of the presence of native tradition and native peoples that are still residing here, practicing, and able to overcome colonization."

Organized by the Multicultural Center, Native American Student Union, Break the Chains, and the Survival Center, the amphitheater gathering will feature Chrystos and Stormy Ogden, both prominent writers, speakers and activists for native rights and social justice. Shandine Garcia and Chuck Hunt, both UO faculty members, will also be speaking. Music will be provided by Cuban/Latino salsa group Azuquita, and socially conscious hip-hop group Juice to Make It Happen. This event starts at noon on the 13th and is free, though donations are welcome. More information is available through the Multicultural Center at 346-4321.

In the evening, the celebrations will move to the WOW Hall, where the Cascadia Media Collective will present "Columbus to Cancún," debuting footage from the recent WTO protests in Cancún, as well as presenting footage from 2003 WTO protests in Sacramento, 2001 FTAA protests in Quebec, and 2002 anti-Columbus protests in Denver. Live performances will be given by Chrystos, who will be reading her poetry, and Northwest Connections, a Native American drumming group from Portland.

"We're trying to link historical and present forms of colonialism, because that's what the WTO is all about," says Lisa Igoe, a member of the collective. This event begins at 8 pm and costs $5. For more information call the collective at 688-2809.

A continuation of anti-Columbus events, Transforming Columbus Day, will be held at 12:30 pm Oct. 14 in Room 206 of the Education Building at LCC. Presentations by Chrystos and Stormy Ogden will encompass colonialism and focus on the plight of native people in the U.S. prison industrial system. For more information call 520-5401.

PEACE, JUSTICE AND MEDIA IN SPOTLIGHT

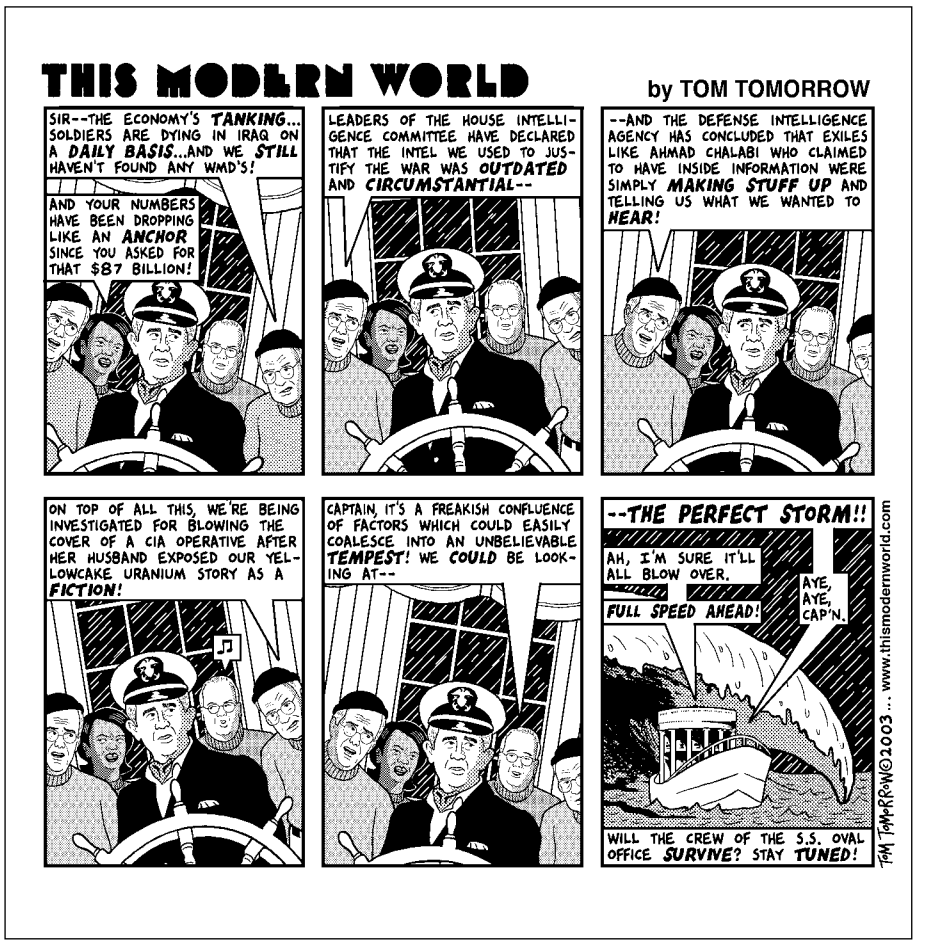

What is the role of the media, and how can it educate and empower the general public, advocates and activists? Is there a way to reform the mainstream media? Can that reformation result in more fairness, accuracy and diversity of voices to strengthen the progressive movement and the independent alternative media?

These are some of the questions that will be explored through the Peace, Justice and Media Conference, Oct.9-12 at LCC and UO. The conference includes workshops, national and regional speakers, theater, visual arts exhibits, poetry and a free film festival. The films are described and listed at www.justicenotwarcoalition.org and in the Oct. 2 EW. The conference is presented by Justice Not War Coalition, Northwest Media Project, UO Survival Center and EW.

The conference kicks off at 12:30 pm Thursday, Oct. 9 at 7th and Pearl with a rally to protect the Bill of Rights. Jim Hightower and San Francisco Mime Troupe will perform excerpts from their evening shows, and Hope Marston of the Bill of Rights Defense Committee will also be there in support of civil liberties. A delegation will go to Sen. Gordon Smith's office to present him with a letter signed by local organizations asking him to join Sen. Ron Wyden in support changes to the USA PATRIOT Act.

Conference topics range from community media outlets to racism in progressivism to military recruitment in the schools. National speakers and performers include Hightower, radio commentator and best-selling author; Andrea Buffa, anti-war activist and former executive directory of Media Alliance, a San Francisco-based media accountability group; Kelly Campbell, founding member of September 11th Families for Peaceful Tomorrows; and San Francisco Mime Troupe, a nationally acclaimed political theater group.

The dozens of workshop speakers include EW's own Ted Taylor and Alan Pittman, who with Peter Moore will present "Beyond Mainstream Press: How Crucial is the Role of the Alternative Print Media?" at 11 am Saturday in the UO EMU's Ben Linder Room. For updated schedule details, visit www.justicenotwarcoalition.org

DEVELOPER EYES PARK TO BUILD CONDOS

The city of Eugene is considering selling West University Park to a developer who wants to build condominiums. The developer also wants the city to waive property taxes for his project for 10 years. City staff are analyzing the request, which would require approval from the City Council. The city closed the park several years ago as part of its police sweeps of homeless people in the area. The West University Neighborhood task force recently expressed interest in reopening the park. — Alan Pittman

DON'T CALL

To help clean up the riot-prone student ghetto around the UO, the West University Neighborhood Task Force has called for the city to strengthen its enforcement of nuisance complaints and make it easier for citizens to file complaints. But the city is moving in the opposite direction. Due to budget cuts, the city is will no longer take land use complaints on the phone, only in writing. — AP

NIKE'S LEGAL WRIGGLES IRK LABOR ACTIVISTS

Fair labor advocates are angry that Nike slipped out of its false advertising lawsuit with a settlement rather than having the case go to trial.

Nike had claimed that its allegedly false advertising about good treatment of its sweatshop laborers in Asia was protected by the First Amendment. But the corporation failed to get the U.S. and California supreme courts to go along with its legal theory.

The case appeared headed for a trial, but California lawyer Marc Kasky settled the lawsuit this month after Nike agreed to pay

SLANT

• We're happy to see Don Hampton's card rise to the top of the deck in the final shuffle for the County Commission appointment to replace Tom Lininger. Hampton's been one of the aces in the deck with his solid background in economic development, labor, land use, education and long-range planning. He's a retired teacher, mayor of Oakridge and a former city councilor. The joker in this game is once again Commissioner Anna Morrison who made her colleagues cringe with her insulting and belittling comments "welcoming" Hampton to the board. Hampton graciously responded that they can both learn from each other. Morrison needs to start her lessons right away if she wants anyone to ever take her viewpoints seriously.

• Tony Corcoran announced this week that he's resigning from the Oregon Senate to accept an appointment to the state Employment Appeals Board. He'd gotten himself into a PERS pickle by wrangling a practical compromise in an impossible situation. His courageous leadership in PERS "reform" made it difficult to keep his day job working with some short-sighted and unappreciative colleagues at SEIU. We would like to see him stay in the Senate and the state job is a good opportunity, but he needs to eat. He's a talented, knowledgeable and passionate public servant, but he's not ready to retire. Corcoran was rumored to be eyeing a way out of his union job for some time now. We figured he'd run for the County Commission seat Don Hampton now occupies when it comes up for election next year. Hampton wouldn't necessarily run against Corcoran, so now that dynamic changes. And if state Rep. Floyd Prozanski gets appointed to Corcoran's seat on the Senate, that opens up a House seat. This little legislative shake-up could also affect who sits on the County Commission, Eugene City Council and even our Planning Commission in 2004.

• Gotta hand it to WAND members Leslie Brockelbank, Susan Cundiff, Cappy Eaton, Betsy Steffenson, and Kara Steffenson who did a pilgrimage to D.C. in September to lobby Oregon's congressional delegation to curb the military budget and stop development of nuclear weapons, and instead appropriate money to programs that empower and support America's women and children. The blue-apron gang says they had a great time, met just about everybody on their list, and got to hang out with the likes of Molly Ivins, Helen Thomas, Barbara Lee, Jan Schakowsky and Dianne Feinstein. Check out Women's Action for New Directions at www.wand.org

$1.5 million to the Fair Labor Association.

The settlement angered sweatshop advocates who say the FLA was set up and controlled by Nike and other exploiters of third-world labor to divert criticism.

"The terms of the settlement were totally set by Nike," Jeffrey Ballinger, a leading Nike fair labor activist, said in a column by worker's rights advocates. "If any money is going to come out of Nike to settle this kind of case, it should go to [third-world] workers who were cheated by Nike. End of story." — AP

PHONE SPAM

Those who want to slay phone spam may want to consider the size of the beast they're up against. There are 236,000 people in the U.S. making those annoying dinner-time phone calls from 11,428 telemarketing companies which make $8.2 billion a year off the industry of bothering you. That U.S. Census data doesn't even count the calls from the 7,689 harassing collection agencies that reach out and touch you. Despite overwhelming public and political opposition for decades, the number of telemarketing firms is growing, not shrinking, at about 3 percent a year, and the number of bill collection companies is growing at 4 percent a year. — AP

CONFERENCE TARGETS MARINE RESERVES

The marine world off Oregon's shores and the campaign to create protected areas in the ocean known as marine reserves will be the theme of the 16th annual Coast Conference coming up Oct. 25-26 in Newport. The conference is sponsored by the Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition and is open to the public.

Keynote speaker will be Pietro Parravano, president of the Pacific Coast Federation of Fishermen's Associations (PCFFA) and a member of the Pew Oceans Commission.

"There has never been a better time to discuss conserving our oceans," says Phillip Johnson, an Oregon Shores board member and director of the group's CoastWatch program. "The Pew Oceans Commission report has raised awareness of damage to the ocean as never before, but also raised hope that we can reverse the situation."

Other speakers will include OSU marine scientist Mark Hixon, Dave Hatch of the Siletz tribe, OSU marine researchers Vicki Wedell and Elise Granek and others.

For more information, contact Phillip Johnson at (503) 238-4450; or e-mail orshores@teleport.com

CORVALLIS GROUP GETS NATIONAL ATTENTION

The Sept. 28 New York Times Magazine featured an article about Grease Works, a Corvallis-based cooperative which promotes and distributes an alternative fuel known as biodiesel — a fuel that is domestically produced, vegetable-based and can be used in any diesel engine.

Grease Works has expanded over the last two years to 30 members, including a coastal branch, and in the process has displaced more than 21,000 pounds of CO_2 emissions in the greater Corvallis area and the central Oregon Coast, according to the group's calculations. Best of Eugene

Best Peacemaker and Best Chef (Soriah): Ibrahim Hamide

Strangest job: Catering Alan Siporin's wedding. It was at Clark Creek and we had nothing to work with but an old water pump. It was like the wild West days, in the middle of nowhere with no facilities. Yet we put up this feast.

Best paranormal experience: One time I was cutting down a Christmas tree up near Cougar Reservoir and I parked the truck I was using with the brakes on and everything in gear. My little girl had fallen asleep in the truck and I left her sleeping there. As I went across the road to cut the tree down, the truck began rolling and it looked like it was going straight into the reservoir and I was too far away to run to it and do anything. Instead, I knelt down, turned my hands skyward and prayed. Then this little twig of a tree — no bigger than my thumb in diameter — held that truck from going over. That was the only thing I could see holding the truck back and it was too small to hold it. I never even figured out why the truck rolled — all the brakes were on.

Wildcard: What is the connection between food and peace? Food is eternal as we are, we exist with food and perish without food. To me, we each have such an individual experience with food: Some see it as fuel and wolf it on the run, and some people meditate over their meal. To me, there is always an interaction between food and us. Hardly anybody closes their eyes when they eat. In the food business, we try to engage all the senses.

When you feed somebody, you don't have the intention of hurting them. Those two things are diametrically opposed. In my culture, if your enemy comes into your house, you must wait on them three days before you even ask them what they are there for. You must feed them and offer them sanctuary. That brings the best out of people and so does peace. Food nurtures their body and peace nurtures their souls — the two are very interconnected.

What do time travel, mullets, '64 Dodge Darts, Cougar Reservoir and translating on a Soviet canning ship have in common? Absolutely nothing, yet all make an appearance in our 2003 Best of Eugene Readers' Poll. For four weeks in August, we ran a ballot in our paper asking readers to pick their favorites for categories ranging from Best Hairdresser to Best Place To Shake Your Booty to Best Soup.

After weeks of tallying hundreds upon hundreds of ballots, winners finally emerged in most of the categories. Some categories had no clear winner. Where possible, we included a first, second and third place.

We had some nice surprises, some repeats, some typical Eugene answers and some sarcastic responses. Despite its recent troubles, FOOD for Lane County emerged victorious in two categories: Best Local Cause and Best Non-Profit. The readers say the anarchists are the Best Hope for Eugene and one person rose to the top of two categories: Café Soriah owner and Eugene Middle East Peace Group member Ibrahim Hamide, who won Best Peacemaker and Best Chef. Peace and good food: What's more Eugene than that?

Here, we randomly selected a few winners and tossed three questions at them: What was the strangest job you ever had? What was your best out of body or other paranormal experience? And the third was a wildcard. Each winner could ask and answer a question, or we just made one up on the spot and threw it at them. Here are their off-the-cuff responses.

Congratulations to all the winners!

Best of Eugene

Best Hairdresser: Jarrell Flores/Williamsixteen

Strangest job: This one, because people listen to me all day.

Best out of body experience: When I rafted the Grand Canyon.

Wildcard: What are my top three obsessions? My dog, my house and the outdoors.

Best Newspaper Reporter: Bob Welch

Strangest job: It's a toss up between raking beans in a Corvallis cannery, which often required me to remove dead mice and snakes from them, and working on a field burning project. There, the machines would always break down and only one guy could fix them. During the down time, two of us would go over the 'Word Power' section of Reader's Digest, testing each other and learning new words.

Best out of body experience: That's easy. 1994: Kenny Wheaton running down the sidelines after intercepting a pass against the Huskies to beat them. That was the play that triggered the whole Rose Bowl thing. He ran 97 or 99 yards; it was a wonderfully long 10 seconds as he raced down the field. You knew he was going to score and Washington was helpless and you knew we were going to win. We were hugging people we'd never met before.

Wildcard: Are you going to write about this award in your R-G column? No.

Best Female Musician: Laura Kemp

Strangest job: When I was a kid in Wisconsin, I worked in a cornfield detassling corn for $2 per hour.

Best paranormal experience: I dated a guy for a little while who was a channeler. Hanging out with him while he channeled — that was pretty crazy. He'd go into a trance and you knew it wasn't fake. He'd start speaking a language I knew he didn't know.

Wildcard question: Questions like, 'When will your new CD be done?' or 'What do you hope to be doing 10 years from now?' pop into my mind. But I am trying to live in the present moment and keep my life as simple and stress-free as possible. So I'll ask myself this: 'Would you like decaf coffee this morning or fresh ginger tea?' I've got a bit of a cold, so I guess I'll opt for the ginger tea.

Best Male Musician: Dan Schmid

Strangest job: Being in the Cherry Poppin' Daddies. Everything about it is strange, from the hours you keep to the places you travel, to the people you meet — mostly the people you meet. Largely, it's the lifers in the music business, like the crusty old stagehands. They've mostly lived late at night around drugs and alcohol and around others who do the same thing. That gives you an overall skewed perspective — your worldview morphs dramatically. For four years that's how I made my living.

Best out of body experience: Many years ago, on tour in Aspen, Colorado. I was having an asthma attack that was really profound and I thought I was going to die and had sort of given up after many hours with no relief in sight. I had been sick for days. People around me were bumbling, not knowing what to do and I finally managed to tell them to take me to the hospital. I had to climb up these stairs to the street outside where it was snowing hard, and get into a van with a door that took forever to open, and no one thought to help me walk or climb in. When I got into the van, everything turned an orange/black color and I thought, 'This is it; I'm dying now and that's fine. It's better than this.' I gave up the ghost and completely relaxed and within two minutes was almost completely over my attack.

Wildcard: Why after all the success are you waiting tables at High Street in Eugene?

I needed to do something to pay the rent. Plus, my manager is really nice and I can take off days when I need to play music (with the Daddies, the Visible Men and Mood Area 52) — which is the focus of my life.

Best Fine Artist: Dan Hitchcock

Strangest job: I was the first male stripper in Dallas, Texas. It's true. It was at PT's, a female topless club and they decided to put male dancers out. There were 15 of us and I got the second highest money that night. My wife, May, says the most interesting job I ever had was painting a mural on the Ruth Hall Museum of Paleontology on the Ghost Ranch in Abiqui, New Mexico.

Best paranormal experience: Living in physical reality. I'm one of those subatomic people; we're all waves resonating.

DYLAN FREEMAN
★ Best Graffiti Artist

Wildcard: You've done some of the most beautiful murals around town. How did your career begin? I drew my girlfriend's picture from the annual. My mother entered it in the county fair and it won the sweepstakes. I am self taught; I got my GED and never went to college. I think all kids that will take the time to pick up a pencil, pen or brush and attempt it will be rewarded by persistence. Don't be daunted by the fact that art looks bad until you make it look good.

Best Graffiti Artist: Dylan Freeman

Strangest job: Being the lead artist for the city-funded graffiti art program. The idea was to do projects that would curtail illegal tagging in our community. The city advertised it all over the schools and pumped it up like it was a youth sports program. The goal was to target youth at-risk or already involved in illegal tagging, and make this an alternative project for them. But the way it was advertised, it became the cool thing to do and very popular. People who had no experience with art or understanding of the purpose of graffiti became involved, and that wasn't the population we were targeting. At first the city thought it was successful, but it became hard to orchestrate activities with the target youth. A lot of the people we would have wanted to be involved were turned off because they saw it as too establishment.

Best paranormal experience: I was staying out of town by a river that I walked to in the morning to do some stretching, when a beaver swam up and started circling in the same spot over and over, making a loud crying and wailing noise and splashing for about 10 minutes. It made a strong impression on me. When I went into town later that day, I found out my grandfather had just passed away. That was pretty intense.

Wildcard question: What is the value of graffiti art in our community? Graffiti art is the people's voice. In a culture where we are constantly bombarded with TV ads, flashing signs and billboards, graffiti expresses the emotions and ideas of the people. Even graffiti done in an illegal, objectionable manner often serves our community overall as a nonviolent outlet for frustration. It may also be a sign that there are people in our community whose voices are not heard any other way. Highly evolved graffiti art, as with any other art form, connects us with our true selves and the people around us.

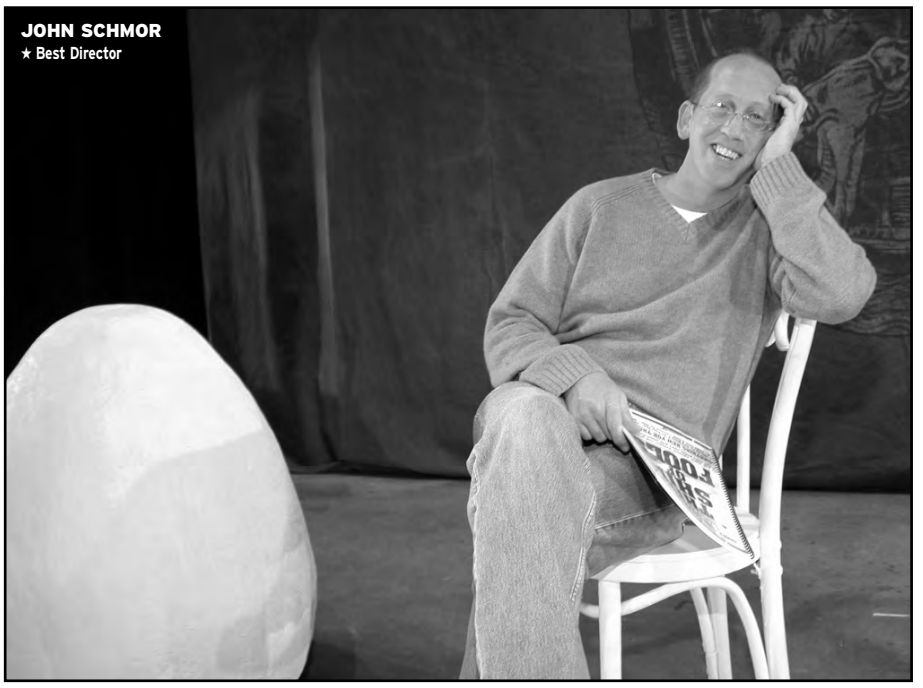

STEPHEN SPEIDEL
★ Best Actor (male)

Best Politico: Peter DeFazio

Strangest job: Shagging golf balls in the days before driving ranges when I was 12. My father ran a caddy camp for inner city kids. I would dodge them on the fairway, wait 'til I had about 50 and bring them back. I'd usually get paid about $2.50 for every 50. There was risk to the job, but that was before OSHA. The job taught me how to deal with obnoxious rich people. And dodge things.

Best paranormal experience: I don't know if it's the best, but it certainly can't be explained through science. It would be listening to U.S. House Majority Leader Tom DeLay talk about DDT or global warming. He thinks removing DDT from the market was a communist plot. And he thinks global warming is a total lie. He used to be a pesticide sprayer. And he asked me, 'How can you think there are problems with DDT? I use to apply it.' To which I just said, 'Mm hmm.'

Wildcard: Why do I drive a '64 Dodge Dart? (I just upped it from a '63 that the Dems are gonna auction off.) Because every part was made in America and I know how to fix it. My motto: Dodge Dart guys have more fun.

Best Actor (male): Stephen Speidel
How I Learned to Drive

Strangest job: When I was 15, my dad had all the hotdog and hamburger stands inside Pacific Ocean Park. One of the guys who ran the rides gave me a couple of bucks once in a while to put on a costume, go inside the ride and hide next to where the cars would go, and jump out and scare people. I'd really scare them, too. The bulldog machine that was supposed to come out and scare them was broken.

Best out of body experience: When I'm in the zone onstage and there's nothing else except what's happening in the play with my fellow actors and myself. We live for those moments.

Wildcard: What's been your favorite role up to this point? That's really hard — it's probably the role I'm doing at the time (Currently, that's Stage Manager of Our Town at VLT). But some roles stay with you; they linger and become friends and sometimes enemies in your inner dialogue as you go through your life. My two favorites would probably be Uncle Vanya and Peck (Drive). They were total opposites: Peck was night and Vanya was day.

pretended to be someone who was sexually harassed at work, in tears and crying. I performed with another actor. They'd put out a big buffet and we'd perform in this huge conference room. I had to go in, be fine, then break down and start bawling. That's pretty weird. I was also a dishwasher at Casa Toltec.

Best out of body experience: I was an exchange student in Turkey when I was 17 and I went back three years later to visit the family I had stayed with. But the mom had died and I didn't know. I shared a bedroom with my host niece, who was 3 years old. I fell asleep and began dreaming. I went through a time tunnel and things were coming toward me really fast like Turkish artifacts and in the distance I saw the mom's face and she came closer and closer and just before she was about to embrace me, the 3 year old screamed in her sleep; she just started freaking out. The next day her mother said that my dead host mother was trying to greet me and it was good the girl screamed and woke me up because the mother would have given me the kiss of death.

Wildcard: Your favorite role of all time? Miss Adelaide from Guys and Dolls. But my favorite role is always the last one I've done. For Adelaide, I got to use my singing, acting and dancing.

Best Director:
John Schmor
This Ship of Fools

Strangest job: Working as a translator on a Soviet fisheries canning ship in the Bering Sea, where the temperature of the water is so cold it would only take four minutes to die if you fell in. The Soviets canned what the American fishermen caught. The boat was antiquated and constantly undergoing repair. I had to translate to get two three-ton bags of fish from the small American boat onto our ship. If I'd given the wrong directions, the Americans could have been towed right into the water, so I had to have good grammar.

Best paranormal experience: Waking up one day on the boat and the whole ship was empty. I went to all the decks; no one was anywhere, and everything was encompassed in a thick, heavy fog, so I couldn't see beyond the railing. I thought, 'uh oh.' Turns out the night before there had been a terrible storm and everyone was up all night working, so when it abated the captain gave everyone the day off.

Wildcard: What experience have you had in the theater that was most like the foggy ship one? Last year, when I had to suddenly play the nurse in Romeo and Juliet, because Mindy Nirenstein was sick. Corey (Pearlstein, former managing artistic director of Lord Leebrick) called and said they couldn't afford to cancel another show, and I was the only one who knew the part and the blocking. Three hours before showtime, I was madly memorizing lines.

PAUL'S BICYCLE WAY OF LIFE
★ Best Bike Store

Best Mail Carrier: David Harmon Miller

Strangest job: I was in the military during Vietnam, and it was weird in that I guess I was unprepared for what was going on there. I went from being sort of a moderate supporter to not supporting at all. A lot of things that went on nationally, internationally and personally made it a weird experience.

Best out of body experience: I'm an epileptic, even though I haven't had an episode for 15 or 20 years. I got that in the service, too. It's not really the best, but it gives you these strange experiences — you can't believe these things are happening to you.

Wildcard question: Why me, for life? I try to understand my whole experience here and I realize that for me — whatever higher powers there are — it's not preordained, but just an experience.

Best Mullet: Dean Grazier-DelCastillo

Strangest job: I've always been an entrepreneur and rarely worked for anyone; I've always had my own businesses, like Spiderman Tree Service, my current one.

Best paranormal experience: I've had dreams that have come true and have thought questions of people but I didn't speak and they answered me. Like once, my girlfriend was walking across the living room and I thought, 'Would you please bring me my hairbrush?' and she did. I asked her why she did it and she said because I asked her to. She thought I had said it aloud. We even argued about it.

Wildcard: How am I going to get past this point in my life? That's been troubling me lately. I've got serious back problems stemming from a childhood injury. I need to have surgery; if I don't, I'll become crippled. But if I take the time off work to have surgery, my wife and I will lose everything. I have no answer to that.

Best TV Talking Head: John Fischer

Strangest job: I used to work for a guy with a garden when I was in high school in Spring (pronounced Sprang), Texas, and he grew 20 times more of everything than what he needed. I'd help him grow it, then harvest it all and I'd wander the neighborhood and give all the extra food away.

(Obviously, being a weatherman is the weirdest possible job: Wherever I go people recognize me — and I didn't do this to be famous).

Best paranormal experience: It's amazing how frequently, if I forget to knock on wood, the bad thing will happen. A couple of weeks ago at work (KEZI-TV), all the computers were down but mine. I said how glad I was, but I didn't knock on wood, and the next day mine went down.

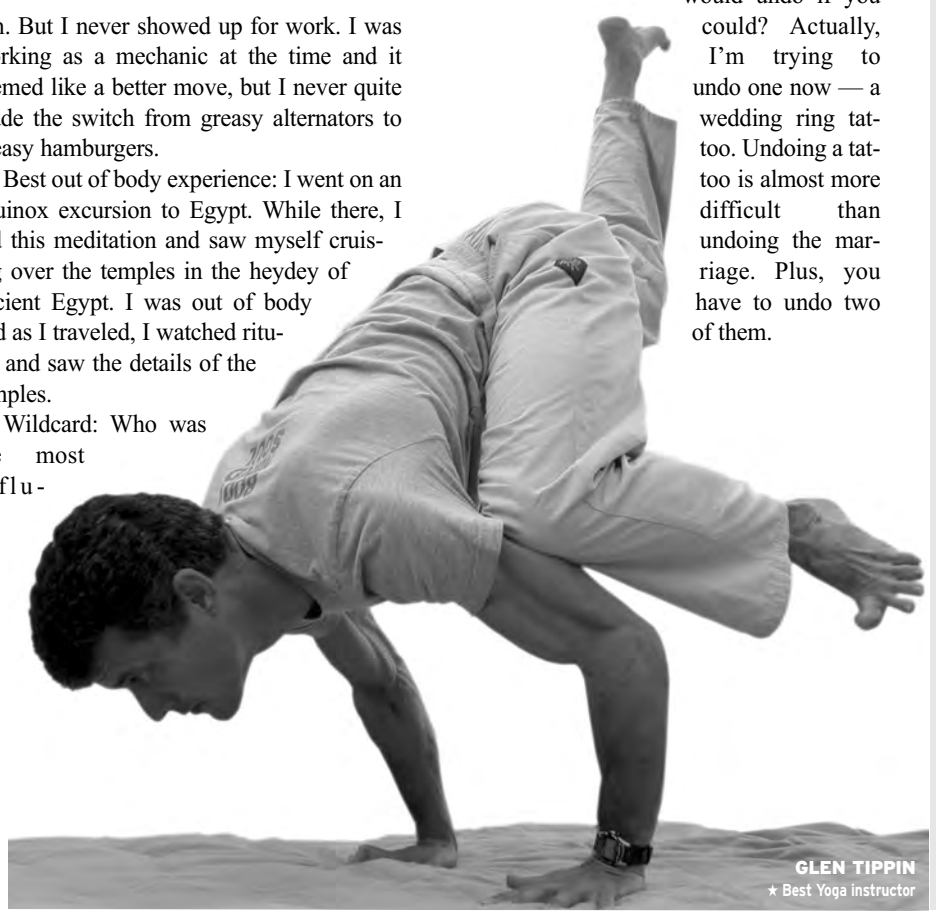

Wildcard question: What do strangers always say to me? Thanks for the weather, or they blame it on me.

Best Yoga Instructor: Glen Tippin

Strangest job: When I was a college student and I went to a McDonald's orientation, because I was always a health-conscious person. But I never showed up for work. I was working as a mechanic at the time and it seemed like a better move, but I never quite made the switch from greasy alternators to greasy hamburgers.

Best out of body experience: I went on an equinox excursion to Egypt. While there, I did this meditation and saw myself cruising over the temples in the heydey of ancient Egypt. I was out of body and as I traveled, I watched rituals and saw the details of the temples.

Wildcard: Who was the most influential person in my life? The one who put me on this path is my mom, Lorilynn Imbler. She teaches yoga and gave me my spiritual background. The most important thing she's taught me is it's OK to be yourself. Also, it's OK to question authority.

Best Tattoo Artist: Dr. Julien

Strangest job: That's a tough one to answer. My favorite job was working as a pastry chef for a French restaurant. The strangest — and maybe scariest — tattoo job I've ever done was for a mob boss, henchmen standing by and everything.

Best out of body experience: Hmm, there have been so many. There's the alien abduction, and tattooing for hours at a time every day, sometimes I lose all feeling in the lower half of my body, which feels kind of out of body.

Wildcard: Do you have a tattoo that you would undo if you could? Actually, I'm trying to undo one now — a wedding ring tattoo. Undoing a tattoo is almost more difficult than undoing the marriage. Plus, you have to undo two of them.

EW Staff Picks by Alan Pittman

Best Way to Replace UO Fields Lost to the New Basketball Arena

The UO's new basketball arena will likely displace scarce UO playing fields for softball and intramural sports. What better place for replacement fields than the riverside property the UO owns? The UO's push to develop the area as a research park for corporations has wasted millions of dollars and been opposed for decades by the majority of students and faculty who want the river side preserved for open space. Here's a true win-win solution

Best Way for Neighbors to Stop the New Basketball Arena

Form a group, Citizen Rage Against Phil (CRAP) to protest the influence of Nike CEO Phil Knight at the UO. Demonstrate at every home basketball and football game with large banners that can be seen on TV with anti-sweatshop slogans. Agitate for the UO to join the Workers Rights Consortium. Organize a large anti-sweatshop conference at the UO. Circulate petitions on campus and gather thousands of signatures against Nike sweatshops. Have a swoosh bonfire with shoes and apparel. Phil Knight will become so enraged he'll pull funding for the arena. Problem solved.

Best Fundraiser

In Portland, the annual Bridge Pedal draws tens of thousands of cyclists to enjoy a car-free ride over the city's Willamette River bridges. The $20 ride raises money for charity and is a fun community event that promotes pollution-free transportation. Eugene could do the same. Visualize thousands biking across the I-105 bridge!

Best Place to Get Sconed

Ruthie B's just across the bridge in Springfield offers enough clotted cream on its scones to seize your heart. Put on a feather boa and frumpy hat from inside the antique store and head out to the lovely garden tables for tea next to Day Island Park. Inside, it's like dining in your grandmother's attic. Better go soon, the old whore-house Ruthie's inhabits is threatened by development of an apartment building.

Best Way to Brighten Eugene

Colorful buildings. Why are buildings in Eugene so drab? Is it to match the eight months of gray skies we have here? The new library sports gun-metal gray highlights, the Hult Center is a gray concrete monolith and downtown's parking garages and other buildings are mostly monochrome. No wonder there's so much graffiti.

Best Way to Get Stopped by the EPD

Be a young black man driving around Whiteaker in a VW bus with a bunch of Hispanic friends and Oregon Country Fair Stickers in the window.

Best Boondoggle

Eugene Weekly readers picked changing Centennial to MLK Boulevard as their choice for this category. But remember how opening Broadway was supposed to create a renaissance downtown? After millions of dollars spent on ripping out the old pedestrian mall and tall trees and planting a road and new tiny trees, much of the mall remains vacant or underused. It would have been cheaper paying for full UO scholarships for the dozen or so mall rats that the bulldozer project was aimed at.

Best Rube Goldberg Machine

The library's new check-in machine. Books stacked up as high as librarians after the new library opened and the $2.2 million system of electronic eyes, hands and belts choked. Ten months after opening, the talking book return slots are just starting to work right. But the contraption still chokes on children's puppets, leaving tikes pining for their cuddly friends. Instead of paying for the book terminator, the city could have hired an army of unemployed Eugeneans at minimum wage to sort books for years.

Best Thing to Happen in Years

Walk into Eugene's airy and bright new library and it's hard to remember the cramped dark hole where Eugene used to stuff its books and book lovers. The new building has become a major city attraction and over the years should do a lot to boost local enlightenment. Best of all, it's free.

Best Way to Stop Beer Riots

Declare the UO an alcohol-free institution of higher learning. To show the university is serious, set a modest example of no tolerance by hiring the EPD SWAT team, backed up by a National Guard tank, to swoop down on Autzen tailgaters with tear gas and pepper spray to enforce open container laws. Have LTD ready to transport mass arrests to Mac Court for processing. Expel any students caught and rip up any alum's season tickets.

Best Wheeeee! With Taxes

The city is planning two big new riverside playgrounds in Alton Baker and Skinner Butte Parks. The playgrounds will be the biggest in the area and a top tot destination. Creative input could make for some uniquely Eugene fun. To help design the chutes, ladders, go rounds and monkey bars, call 682-4915.

Best Evidence Eugene is Not a Democracy

The most important decision the Eugene City Council makes is hiring a city manager, the most powerful person in the city. The most important decision the city manager makes is hiring a police chief, the second most powerful person in the city. Unlike many other cities, in Eugene both of these vital hiring decisions are made in secret meetings.

Best School Fundraiser

Whoever thought of hooking kids on caffeine and calorie-loaded corporate Coke in the midst of an obesity epidemic to raise a few bucks for schools from captive kids was a genius! Here's another modest proposal: Make Starbucks the monopoly provider of coffee and lattes to school staff and administrators. Pressure teachers to meet a weekly quota of Starbucks for school bucks. Dawn meetings could help here. Then, and here's the real genius, install pay toilets in all restrooms used by school employees.

Best Birth Control for Chad

Remember all the problems those pregnant chads caused in the 2000 presidential election? Well, three years later, Lane County voters are still punching hanging and pregnant chads and trying to remember to punch number 9 for no on Measure 8. Almost every other county in the state has moved to optical vote scanners, which don't rob hundreds of voters every election of their constitutional rights. Lane County says we'll have to practice unsafe voting for at least a couple more years before they'll bother with prophylactics.

Best Newspaper Fluff Check

Go online and search The Register-Guard archives for "duck" and then search again for "city of Eugene." The result shows just how much the paper invests in covering sports fluff over serious city issues with real impacts on the community. As more and more sports stories spill out of the sports section and onto the front page and city sections, the fluff to news ratio at the R-G now stands at four to one.

KURT AND ROB WIDMER.
SUCCESSFULLY CONFUSING BUSINESS
AND PLEASURE SINCE 1984.

The line between work and recreation can get a little blurry for craft brewers Kurt and Rob Widmer. One minute they might be inspecting hops and barley. Which is a lot of work. Then they might be writing off a trip to the pub the next. Which is definitely a pleasure. Then there are the meetings with the accounting department. Not fun. Followed by the daily samplings of their delicious hefeweizen. Fun. You can see how this gets confusing.

Rob (right) finds the anaerobic bottling machine funny. Kurt, not so much.

CAFÉ SORIAH
★ Best Overall Restaurant

Best of Eugene Restaurants

The restaurant world is a quick-moving, fickle place, relying on changing tastes, trends and appetites. In Eugene, some places are consistent and unanimous winners: Shiki for its wonderful sushi, Newman's for its famous fish and chips, and Beppe & Gianni's for high quality and creative Italian food. But just because a place won kudos from Eugene Weekly readers in years past, doesn't guarantee it winning again.

Pizza has always been a restaurant category where everyone has an opinion, and for years the opinions settled on Pegasus. In a major upset this year, Bene Gourmet Pizza took first place. The local chain has three locations — downtown, Oakway Center and in a strip mall on Willamette Street — and has achieved the status of a household name. The pizza itself is consistently good, with quality toppings that range from the extreme gourmet (duck sausage, exotic mushrooms and rare cheeses) to the plain and perfectly simple cheese. Another major draw is the economics: for a very reasonable price, you'll get enough pizza to eat for dinner, and for lunch the following day. Interestingly enough, Bene has become this popular without having to deliver, and when you try the pizza it hasn't been sitting in a cardboard box for the past half hour. That really does make a difference, in both taste and texture.

Another upset was KoHo Bistro winning best Northwest, a category belonging traditionally to Marché. KoHo Bistro did well in lots of categories this year, placing for its salads, soups, and seafood as well as for Upscale Menu (third place), Best American (second place), and Best Overall (second place). The Best Chef award (second place) this year went to Kevin Hyland, owner and head chef at KoHo. The place is now well and truly "discovered."

West Brothers' new location didn't slow it down in any category. This summer the two restaurants, West Brothers' Barbecue and River Ranch Steakhouse, fused into one at the River Ranch Location. Fans figured it out quick enough, and this year the steakhouse won Best Barbecue (as usual), Best Steak, Best American (second place), and placed third for Brewpub, Beer, and Overall Best Restaurant. The beer is still brewed downtown, and most of the staff followed to the new location. The menu remains eclectic; you can still order all the Hazelnut Crusted Chicken your heart desires, and it also includes more steak and prime rib meals.

Burrito Boy swept the Cheap Eats and Best Burrito categories this year, proving that these categories go hand in hand. Of course, there are others who have figured this out, too, but Burrito Boy is still the best of the best, local, fresh, tasty and quick.

Best Overall Restaurant: Café Soriah

Café Soriah is a benchmark against which other restaurants in town are measured. Every year it wins a heap of awards, this year including Best Overall Restaurant, Best Chef for Ib Hamide, Best Service, Best Soup, Best Romantic Dinner and second place in appetizers, Middle Eastern, and upscale menu.

The surprise this year is the soup award, which is a category that normally goes to French Horn or Glenwood. French Horn closed this year, but Café Soriah has been building its reputation for delicious, fairly priced soup for a while now. For a mere $3.95 you get a bowl of wonderful, rich and delicious soup and a handful of Soriah's fresh homemade bread. It's one of the best lunch deals around.

The soups tend to be thick, stew-like and complete meals unto themselves, and usually there's a choice between cream- and vegetable-based: for example, a cream of artichoke and a hearty, complex split pea, or an exotic lentil and a rich, creamy chowder.

Café Soriah is also the physical expression of one person, Ibrahim Hamide. He won the award for Best Peacemaker, as well as Best Chef, and in his restaurant you can sense his touch in the quiet jazz music, the warm peachy-pink walls and the fresh nosegays in vibrant fall colors at each table. — Marina Taylor

Best New Restaurant: Chao Pra Ya

Not only did this little Thai diner win Best New Restaurant, it also swept the categories for Best Take-Out and Best Southeast Asian. It's not every new business that can make all that happen in one year, and mainly by word of mouth. There's just something about the place that appeals: perhaps the friendly staff (mostly the family of chef Bangon Kaokept and her husband Vivat) who explain the dishes so kindly and serve the food so quickly. Perhaps the clean feel to the place, with its cool colors and fresh roses at every table. Could it be the easy location, or the reasonable prices?

Perhaps, but mainly it's just the great food. The menu is full of surprises: a rainbow of curries, fresh flavorful fish, traditional dishes and creative innovations. The flavors are subtle and surprising, a dash of sweet or sour, an herb that is wonderful and totally unfamiliar, a little spice (or a lot, be careful of the heat level you ask for: "medium" at Chao Pra Ya is spicier than you'd find in another restaurant's hottest dish.) Every vegetable is cooked to tender and colorful perfection, nothing mushy, nothing raw. The portions aren't huge; this is not a place that confuses quantity with quality. Apparently, it's everything Eugene is looking for in a great Thai restaurant. — MT

Best Place to Take the Kids: BabyCakes

Eugene is a kid-friendly town: There are plenty of parks, good schools, kind people. Of course, if your kids are screaming their hearts out in a public place (say a restaurant for example) it's important to be in a really kid-friendly place. Many Eugene restaurants go out of their way to welcome families, but this year's winners are restaurants designed especially with children in mind (yes, even McDonald's I suppose).

BabyCakes, the first place winner, just opened this summer. The space in the restaurant, which used to be the very kid-friendly Bagel Bakery, is open and welcoming to little ones. The wall along one side is painted with chalkboard paint and decorated with an ever-changing blur of children's names, self-portraits and doodles. Baskets of toys, a wooden castle and doll house and a tall stack of books make it a little like visiting a friend's house, except you can order whatever you want to eat.

BabyCakes hosts story times, puppet shows, themed birthday parties and playgroups, as well as impromptu ice cream or hot cocoa stops with friends. The menu is split between adult and child-oriented food, and includes nice selections of coffees from Café Mam and Prince Pückler's ice cream. The kids' snacks include peanut butter sandwiches that come with your choice of jelly, bananas, chocolate chips or honey, little bagel pizzas, rice and veggies, and more. Fresh fruit and veggies come with each kids' meal. It's a comfortable, creative and very Eugene place for your babies. — MT

Best Appetizers: Anatolia

Poppi's Anatolia has been a favorite in Eugene for decades, and this year it wins both Best Mediterranean and Best Appetizers. Many have sat at one of the wonderful window booths, drunk a glass of retsina and sampled the variety of offerings at the top of the menu.

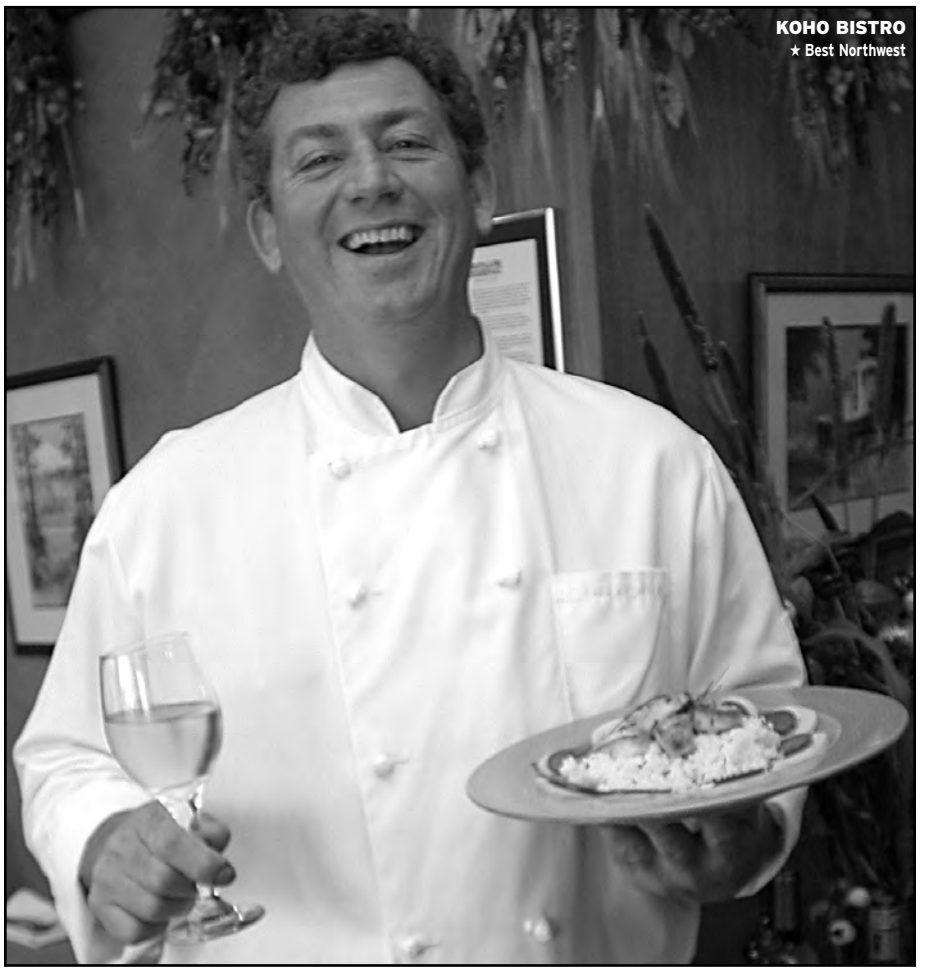

A great start is the Mezedakia, which combines bowls of three separate appetizers surrounded by pita and fennel seed bread on a single platter: dolmadakia, taramaosalata and melitzanosalta.

The bowl of dolmadakia, grape leaves stuffed with pine nuts, raisins and rice, comes topped with a lemon wedge. Delicately tangy on the outside, the taste is faintly sweet from the raisins inside. Pine nuts give a wonderful texture to the stuffing, balancing the soft rice with their firmer give. The tightly wrapped leaves hold together well when speared with a fork.

The taramaosalata is smoked fish roe whipped with potatoes and onions into a creamy texture, and the melitzanosalta is a chunky paste of eggplant, whole cilantro leaves, garlic and tahini. It has a bright, fresh taste with a strong garlicky undertone.

A perennial favorite is also the saganaki, aged sheep's milk cheese deep fried in olive oil and served in a sizzling, blackened pan, with a squirt of fresh lemon juice. Crispy and golden on the outside, and stretching to elastic proportions on the fork, the cheese is delicious with fennel seed bread.

WHAT'S happening

In a unique and intimate partnership of voice and acoustic bass, Jen Chapin (below) and Stephan Crump perform at Café Paradiso. Chapin's jazz and folk-tinged soulfulness merges with Crump's funky beats and haunting lyricism, providing a captivating show. See Saturday Calendar.

Touring in support of their new album, Ruckus, New Orleans-based Galactic (above) raises the roof at the McDonald Theatre. This summer they toured with Jeff Beck, BB King and Mofro, so their licks are quick, and their chops are snappy. High-quality funk explodes across Eugene. See Sunday Calendar.

The Cascadia Wildlands Project's Second Annual Hoe-down for the Ancient Forests at Avalon Stables in Cottage Grove is bound to be a heavy party. Bill Martin will call square dancing to music by the Foghorn String Band, and food and drink will be provided. Shuttle service is available. CWP is a Eugene-based nonprofit dedicated to defending the forests, waters and wildlife of Cascadia. The organization monitors environmentally destructive activities and educates, organizes and agitates for a more compassionate and responsible relationship with Cascadia bioregion ecosystems. See Friday Calendar.

A Rally to Protect Our Rights with Jim Hightower and the San Francisco Mime Troupe is part of the Peace, Justice and Media Conference at the UO. At 12:15 pm Eugeneans bring their loud voices and passion for justice, their outrage and sense of humor to the Federal Building at 7th Avenue and Pearl Street. Participants will be able to sign a letter to Sen. Gordon Smith, asking him to join with Sen. Ron Wyden to change the USA PATRIOT Act. See Thursday, Oct. 9 Calendar.

More than a dozen Oregon poets published in the 2003 anthology, Raising Our Voices, will read in the UO's EMU Fir Room. The anthology features 135 Oregon poets and citizens who registered their protests against the U.S. invasion of Iraq on the national website, www.poetsagainstthewar.org Participating readers include Ralph Salisbury, Ingrid Wendt, Rober Hill Long. See Sunday Calendar.

Western Dimensions

Claywork at Clarke, paintings at Alder

No other material is as versatile as clay, whether used for functional purposes — from bricks to porcelain tea services — or as an art medium. The diversity in the latter is on show at the Karin Clarke Gallery. Gil Harrison, curator and ceramicist from Cottage Grove, chose non-utilitarian or sculptural work of national quality by professional artists never before viewed in this community. Thirteen West Coast artists each bring about a different sensibility and style.

Lyn Sedlak-Ford's (Portland) recent "paintings in clay" depict cozy interiors with windows opening onto cityscapes or landscapes. A cat, books, flowers contribute to the impression of peaceful, domestic scenes, yet the paintings are filled with vitality and movement because of the highly textured surfaces — her skies and fields are clear references to Van Gogh — and bright raku glazes.

Sedlak-Ford also plays with depth perspective: She juxtaposes two-dimensional illusion of depth with three-dimensional carving without necessarily coordinating the two so that the latter sometimes contradicts the former. For instance, in Midnight Snack, the moon and buildings outside the window jut into the room and are on the same plane as the flowers on the table. In other pieces, the scenery comes through the windowpanes into the interior and toward the viewer. Somehow it all works and only enlivens the pictures. Some of the hand-carved slabs are framed with raku-fired tiles; others are unframed, playful free-forms.

The show provides varied examples of clay sculpture. Katy McFadden's art is figurative in a suggestive rather than mimetic way. The Current Regime: Five Pieces shows a group of figures whose massive bodies and tiny heads bitingly implies swollen egos, inflated importance, and lack of thoughtfulness in current politicians. "As an artist," says McFadden (Portland), "my role is to witness the events of my time and how they affect society, family, friends and the environment." Her hand-built, monumental figure, The Ancient One, gazes up into the distance. Her face, smiling and serene, is merely outlined, leaving it to the viewer to fill in details.

James Robinson (Phoenix, Ore.) creates coil-built forms of essential simplicity, either stylized or abstract, and uses sintered matte glazes so that no gloss detracts from form. Despite the ascetic spareness, sensuality is retained, especially in the most abstract pieces, with their fullness of form and suggestion of fertility: Creation Form, sienna-colored, is reminiscent of a bulging seedpod cracking open along one side, while Gemini, a wall-piece, consists of twin seed forms in a red earth tone.

Victoria Shaw (Portland) creates totems out of large numbers of modular pieces stacked together. Coiled or thrown, they vary in size and shape — spherical, pyramidal or disk-like. Dark colors textured with hatchings alternate with pieces in smooth blue, green, or shiny metallic glazes. One of the totems features gleaming ball bearings telling a haiku poem in Braille.

Jim Koudelka (Portland) shows a single, wonderfully whimsical piece, Boiler Boy. Koudelka is interested in "architectural, mechanical and industrial images," and Boiler Boy looks like an old metal antique with cracked paint, but it's all clay. His pieces are the result of throwing, hand-building and use of molds made from found objects. Surface treatments include salt firing, followed by sandblasting, re-glazing, and re-firing to "further develop layers of texture, color, and imagery."

Laurie Hennig's (Boulder Creek, Calif.) pieces, also figurative, include a naked piper in cowboy boots, one huge cowboy boot and a giant stogie.

Her husband, Dan Hennig, combines sculpture — of Southwest creatures — and vessel. One jar has an iguana head for a spout; a parrot is perched on the rim of a flowering-cactus vessel.

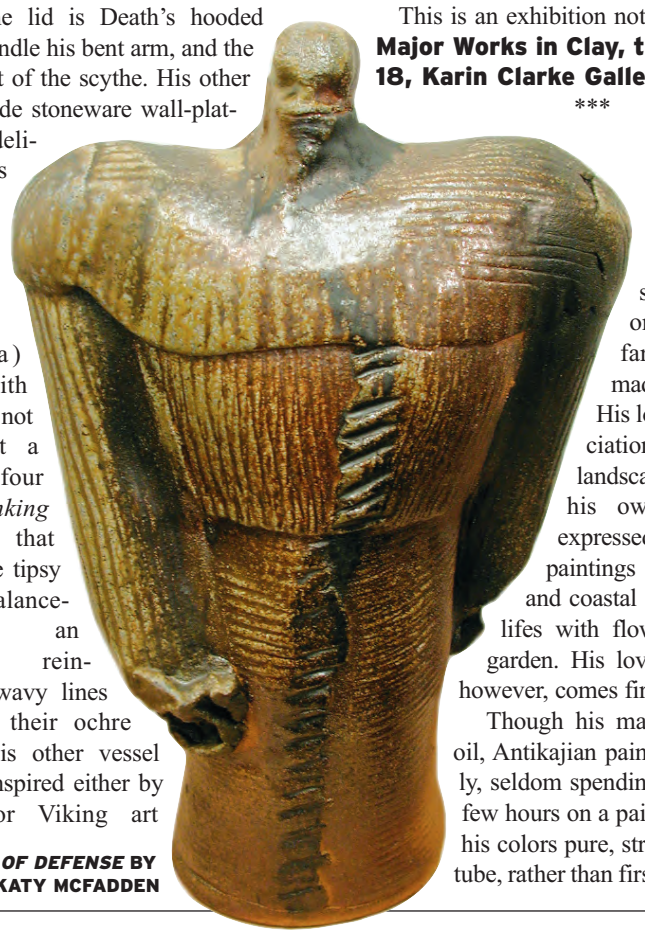

Other artists opt for sculptural vessels instead, and the teapot is a recurring motif. "Teapots are a starting-point for imaginative designs," Harrison said. Gina Freuen (Spokane) is one of the artists who reinterprets the teapot shape into whimsical porcelain sculpture. Freuen's pieces are straight from Alice in Wonderland, and each has a personality. You would not be surprised to see them dance around and sing. Do lift the lids, and you may be rewarded with another diminutive teapot.

Leslie Lee's (Jacksonville) Hatching News Teapot Form consists of a bust of a woman with two birds on her head. One, singing into her ear, is the handle; the other's open beak is the spout. The lid is a bird's nest nestled in her hair.

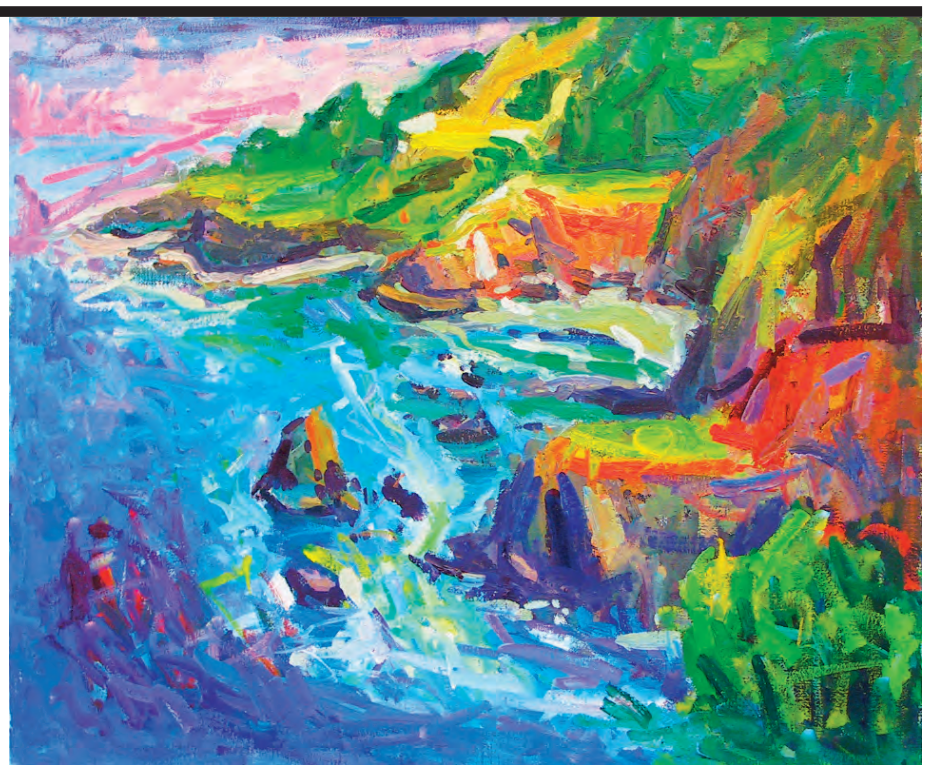

Most of Lee's work is autobiographical or associated with a story. Refilling the Empty Heart shows a bust of her husband clutching a sheath of poems he wrote to deal with grief. Peter Potter's Pack o' Peckers, inspired by an exhibition of Mexican sculpture, depicts a red-hued snake-charmer charming penis-headed snakes out of a basket on his lap.

In Dennis Meiners's (Jacksonville) playful teapot, Death Takes Time Off to Go Bowling, the lid is Death's hooded head, the handle his bent arm, and the spout is part of the scythe. His other pieces include stoneware wall-platters with delicate motifs in blues, ochres and red.

Mark Heiman (Estacada) infused with playfulness not teapots but a group of four jugs, Drinking Buddies, that appear quite tipsy and balance-impaired, an impression reinforced by wavy lines incised on their ochre surfaces. His other vessel forms are inspired either by Japanese or Viking art forms and calligraphy. All are fired with wood in an anagama kiln. Magically, during firing, glazes crackle or elegantly peel off like bark in just the right spots.

SECRETARY OF DEFENSE* BY KATY MCFADDEN

OREGON COAST* BY SARKIS ANTIKAJIAN

Gil Harrison's vessels are about form rather than whimsicality. Their rich, shiny, black glaze, reminiscent of lacquer, lends them drama and stateliness. In earlier pieces, Harrison used the shape of Asian roofs as a starting-point for form, but his later ones are inspired by the shape of falling drops and set up on tripod feet to preserve their drop form. His pieces, thrown and finished with characteristic pulled strands of clay, exhibit exquisite balance and proportion.

Patrick Horsley (Portland) is strongly influenced by architecture. His focus is also on form, his vessels transcending function to become sculptures thrown and altered with an unerring eye for line, volume and structural harmony. His glazes, unreflective so that nothing distracts from form, are not decorative but instead a constitutive, element of design. Color is used with sobriety and precision using a wax-resist technique: bluish-purple or ochre against black or a stunning black-on-black..

This is an exhibition not to be missed: Major Works in Clay, through Oct. 18, Karin Clarke Gallery.

Some 40 years ago, Sarkis Antikajian settled down on Oregon farmland and made it his home. His love and appreciation for Oregon landscapes, including his own garden is expressed through his paintings of local rural and coastal scenes, of still lifes with flowers from his garden. His love of painting, however, comes first.

Though his main medium is oil, Antikajian paints very quickly, seldom spending more than a few hours on a painting. He uses his colors pure, straight from the tube, rather than first mixing them on a palette. Since he works with wet paint only, decisiveness is crucial — he can't afford to rework the colors or they would turn muddy. Indeed, this blunt, decisive brushstroke is Antikajian's hallmark as a painter.

Up close, one may notice only a jumble of long brushstrokes. Yet step back and the paintings not only acquire coherence, but the viewer is seized by their liveliness and energy, which are precisely due to Antikajian's way of applying paint — a technique borrowed from the Impressionists to which he adds an expressive energy that more properly belongs to post-Impressionism. At a distance, his colors turn vibrant rather than overly bright, and become the proper subject of the paintings.

As exemplified by his Newport coast painting, Oregon Coast #1, Antikajian's style is particularly suited to coastal landscape with a tumult of rocks and sea. Oregon Coast #1 follows a yin-yang pattern of composition that bisects the canvas diagonally, forming one blue triangle to the lower left while the upper right is dominated by greens, reds and browns. Each color scheme reappears in the other part as a balancing accent.

Yet I find Antikajian at his best in his paintings of human figures. Diane is a vivid portrait in warm tones against a cool green background. It catches not only the pensive mood of the subject, a certain wistfulness, but something in the young woman's pose also hints at the restlessness of youth, its readiness to get up and go.

In New Mexico Vendors, four bundled-up street vendors with red blankets on their laps sit on portable chairs against a wall, their wares at their feet on a pink blanket. Despite the bright colors, a certain sadness pervades the scene, entirely suggested by the vendors' posture, which evokes resignation to a hard life together with feeling cold.

I wish therefore that the exhibition would entail more portraits and human figures, or even landscapes, and less still lifes, a subject matter I found generally difficult to warm up to. Amateurs painting still lifes, on the other hand, will probably feel gratified by the traditional compositions.

Painting by Sarkis Antikajian, through Nov. 11, Alder Gallery, Coburg. The gallery also hosts an exhibition of the Eugene Glass School's Goblet Competition. EW

LOST IN TRANSLATION: Written and directed by Sofia Coppola. Produced by Sofia Coppola. Ross Katz. Executive producers, Francis Ford Coppola, Fred Roos. Cinematography, Lance Acord. Edited by Sarah Flack. Original music, Kevin Shields. Music producer, Brian Reitzell. Costumes, Nancy Steiner. Sound designer, Richard Beggs. Production design, Anne Ross, K.K. Barrett. Starring Bill Murray and Scarlett Johansson, with Giovanni Ribisi, Anna Faris, Catherine Lambert. Focus Features, 2003. R. 102 minutes.

Sofia Coppola's second feature film (The Virgin Suicides) is a minimalist joy. When she was getting others interested in the work, she showed them a story she'd written, not a screenplay. Even in the finished piece, there's really no plot. But the story is about two lonely, American strangers temporarily stranded in a high-rise Tokyo hotel (the Park Hyatt), who become friends.

Bill Murray plays Bob Harris, a film star revered by the Japanese for comedic roles from earlier in his faltering career. Scarlett Johansson plays Charlotte, a philosophy graduate now married to a photographer who's off shooting music videos. Both give performances that are true and heartbreaking.

While the film has little dialogue, the subtle sounds of hotel life as well as the more complicated rhythms and melodies of Tokyo street life animate the non-talking scenes. Everything that's going to happen between Bob and Charlotte takes place in a compressed time-frame, but the pace of the picture only feels hurried in its final minutes. Longing is one of the more difficult screen passions to portray, but Murray and Johansson reveal new ways to express its complexity.

An inability to sleep first connects them. The film opens with a scene of Charlotte seen from the back, in discreet see-through pink underwear and a camisole, lying on a tousled bed. Charlotte observes her husband, John (Giovanni Ribisi), hastily packing his camera bag, off for the day's shoot. He's gone in a flash, and the young woman has a whole day and night to fill on her own.

Bob is sleepy when he first arrives at the airport, greeted by a number of people from the company that's brought him to Japan, Suntory. But by the time he actually gets to his hotel room and his bed, Bob is wide awake, staring starkly at the walls. He heads for the hotel bar for a nightcap.

These patterns are established over a few days, with only slight variations. But the scenes of Bob shooting the Suntory whiskey advertisement stand alone. Bob sits in a sleep-deprived stupor while a Japanese director half his age hurls loud, staccato instructions at him. "More intensity" is desired. Bob struggles to deliver an invitation to relax with a whiskey the way the director wants. It takes an old pro like Murray to pull off a scene like this, and he's terrific.

Meanwhile, Charlotte fills her days with sightseeing, shopping or learning the art of ikebana (flower arrangement) in the hotel, but she still sits alone in her room much of the time, wistfully missing her husband and confused about why she came on the trip at all.

Between them, Bob and Charlotte show dislocation and loneliness to be demanding states of melancholy. Then they begin to catch sight of one another in the elevator, or in the bar in the middle of the night. Soon enough they are compatriots on the town, looking for some action through the long nights and days. They hail taxis and run down the street, hand-in-hand. The intimacy between them grows.

This is a movie for grown-ups who can sit through a character-driven, moody film. It is a film to be seen more than once, to be savored and thought about. Coppola shows a sure hand in achieving a subtle picture of strangers who discover the quiet pleasures of friendship. Murray brings exhaustion to a lyrical pinnacle.

The film receives my very highest recommendations. Now playing at Cinema World and Cinemark. EW

UNCLE SWEETHEART (JOHN GOODMAN), BOBBY CUPID (LUKE WILSON) AND JACK FALE (BOB DYLAN).

SONY PICTURE CLASSICS, 2003.

Dazed and Confused

Not the movie, the audience

MASKED AND ANONYMOUS: Directed by Larry Charles. Written by Rene Fontaine, Sergei Petrov. Original music by Bob Dylan. Produced by Nigel Sinclair, Jeff Rosen. Executive produced by Anatoly Fradis, Joseph Cohen, Vladimir Dostal, David M. Thompson, Guy East, Marie Cantin, Pietro Scalia. Cinematography by Rogier Stoffers. Editors, Luis Alvarez y Alvarez, Pietro Scalia. Production design, Bob Ziembicki. Costumes, Abigail Murray. Starring Jeff Bridges, Penelope Cruz, Bob Dylan, John Goodman, Jessica Lange and Luke Wilson. With Angela Bassett, Val Kilmer, Giovanni Ribisi and many others. Sony Pictures Classics, 2003. PG-13. 107 minutes.

With a cast like this, how could you go wrong? Easily, is the answer, especially if you're a director new to the medium. The stars here are Big Stars. By nature, they need special treatment. Their egos are strong enough to take over the movie and skew the whole shebang their way if they aren't controlled by a dictator. That's not Larry Charles. He directed multiple episodes of Larry David's HBO series, "Curb Your Enthusiasm," but it doesn't look like that's enough training to take on this many high-profile actors.

Whatever else may be Charles's problem, he doesn't get bupkis from his stars. No, that's not quite true. You can't keep Bridges down. Even in a role this ill-conceived, he will act. Goodman always brazens his way through the show, but this character is so shallow and bellowing you don't know whether to hate him or not. Go ahead and hate him, I say. Bassett projects warmth and respect, as usual, while Kilmer gets up a head of steam to give a good, mad rant. I like him a lot as a loonie. Remember Kilmer's great imitation of the Brando character in The Island of Dr. Moreau? Or maybe not. Not everyone sits through as many exquisitely bad movies as I do.

Writers Rene Fontaine and Sergei Petrov are excluded from the film's production notes, which I first took to be a bad sign. Then I was enlightened by the IMDB (Internet Movie Data Base) that Fontaine is Dylan's nom de plume, and Petrov is director Charles's. I can see why they didn't want to claim this sorry mess up-front.

The only way I can make sense out of the 107 minutes I spent watching Masked and Anonymous is that it's like observing a train wreck: You don't want it to happen, but it's inevitable. And as long as the train's going to jump the rails and hurl itself spectacularly into the abyss, you don't want to miss a minute of it.

Besides waiting for the train wreck, another reason to see it is to determine if the movie's about Dylan's fame. It's as if someone asked: How bad can we make this thing and still trick people into coming to the theater? Answer: Lace it with a lot of Dylan songs. Some he sings, some are sung by others, the best's a young girl's rendition of a Dylan anthem from yesteryear.

I love Dylan's music a lot, and I've seen him perform numerous times. I don't mind his mumbles, his taciturn manner, his occasional hostility to the audience. Frankly, I can't imagine what being famous for 40 years would do to the delicate balance between your inner self and your persona. Dylan clings to his persona like a drowning man, and the mystical aura that's surrounded him looks worn and bitter in this silly movie.

It's as if someone asked:
How bad can we make this thing and still trick people into coming to the theater?

The names of the characters are worth recalling: Jack Fate (Dylan); journalist Tom Friend (Jeff Bridges); Pagan Lace (Penelope Cruz, who plays Friend's friend); the entrepreneur Uncle Sweetheart (John Goodman); resident bitch Nina Veronica (Jessica Lange, still crazy after all these years); Fate's friend, Bobby Cupid (Luke Wilson); Mistress (Angela Bassett); Animal Wrangler (Val Kilmer); Soldier (Giovanni Ribisi). And lots more.

See it if you must. And if you must, see it early in its run. Opens at the Bijou Friday Oct. 10. EW

Consumer Confidence

SURPLUS: TERRORIZED INTO BEING CONSUMERS:
Produced and directed by Erik Gandini. Edited by Johan Soderberg. Music by David Osterberg, Johan Soderberg. Photographers, Cal Nilsson, Lukas Eisenhauer. Mix and sound design, David Osterberg. Participants, George W. Bush, Fidel Castro, John Zerzan, Kalle Lasn, Steve Ballmer, Bill Gates, Tania, Svante Tidholm. Shot in Genova, Shanghai, Alang India, U.S., Cuba, Budapest and Stockholm. Atmo, 2002.

Eric Gandini, who takes credit and blame for this 52-minute experimental film, has a vision, a message to put across, and he isn't shy about manipulating images, sounds and sound-bites to convey that message. (I'm unclear about when to refer to such manipulation as propaganda. Maybe that's only when you don't like the message.) Gandini's very careful to make sure hypnotic, youth-beat, electronic music underlies every color-blasted image. That way you can kind-of move with the beat, which gets you in a groove and does not require any critical thinking. The film repeats some images and spoken words many times, to ensure that the audience gets the message. Get it?

By no stretch is this a documentary film, but it does use the technique of borrowing clips from previous media and manipulating them to its own ends, like Michael Moore's documentaries, only smarter. The original footage includes an interview with Eugene anarchist John Zerzan as well as clips of a Cuban woman who had come to the U.S. and was awed by the choices available in the stores here. The most repeated clip from Zerzan is what the film's publicist refers to as his "call for PROPERTY DAMAGE [that] has inspired many to take to the streets."

Surplus plays at noon on Satruday, Oct. 11 at the Bijou Theater. Sliding scale: $5-$10. Benefit for Green Anarchy, a locally produced quarterly, eco-anarchist publication.

Twisted Pop

Quasi proves relationships change, but don't end.

Portland twosome Quasi has been bashing out beautiful but bitter pop music for 10 years, and the band is now celebrating a brand new CD, Hot Shit. Ex-husband and wife duo Sam Coomes and Janet Weiss transmogrified their energies from their failed marriage into twisted pop music preoccupied with melancholic musings on the injustices of life.

The two have earned their right to revel in misery: Coomes started out playing in San Francisco's Donner Party, followed by a partnership with Elliot Smith, while Weiss also pounds the skins for post-punk starlets Sleater-Kinney.

But you know all this. What you might not know is that Hot Shit will change the way you think about pop music.

The 11 songs veer into dreamlike territory. On the title track, Weiss keeps pace with a train-track beat while Coomes swirls his guitar around like fog. When the vocals kick in, it's typical laconic Coomes' style with the lyrics: "Wild Goose or Holy Grail?/ Red herring or the Great White Whale?/ Not many live to tell the tale./ Little things that just don't matter/ Still could get me mad as a hatter/ Hot shit on a silver platter/ I let go and I float away — a million miles in a couple days/ I just came back to say goodbye."

On Hot Shit, their sixth release, Coomes explores his bluesy side even more than in the past, an unsurprising move since he recently released Blues Goblins, a CD of classic blues covers. All instruments on Hot Shit are played by Coomes and Weiss, with the exception of Brent Arnold's cello and Ollie Glatzer's viola on three songs. This CD is full of the salty-sweet music, acerbic and desperate lyrics and A-plus drumming we have come to know and love by one of the Northwest's most intriguing acts. Quasi performs Sunday at the WOW Hall in Eugene.

Acoustic roots country trio Corb Lund Band germinated in Alberta, Canada in 1994. While all of the members were engaged in other musical efforts at the time, they desired a "side project" in which to "play music familiar to their rural roots."

...Hot Shit will change the way you think about pop music.

Lund's life has been informed by his childhood experiences growing up on the family's fourth generation horse and cattle farm, and his all-original music expresses this rustic experience. As little Lund grew, he turned more and more to music, studying jazz guitar and bass and forming an indie-rock band, the smalls. Lund toured Canada with the smalls until its recent demise in 2001.

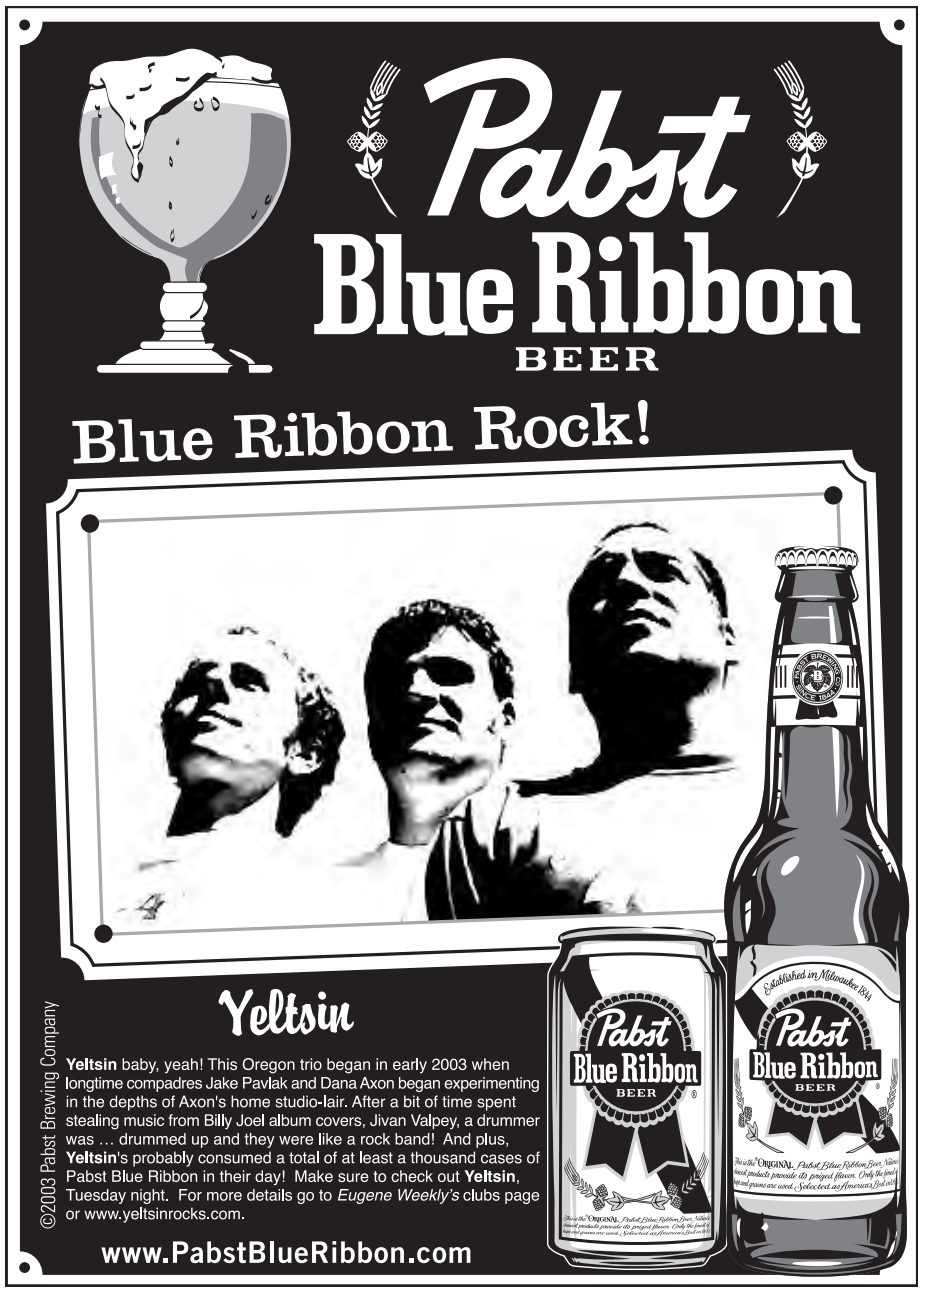

This change paved the way for the Corb Lund Band, and the group recently made its U.S. debut with Five Dollar Bill. (The band's Canadian debut was cassette only, and was followed in 1999 by Unforgiving Mistress.)

The CD's title track is typical Lund — a saga of Prohibition-era booze running on horseback over the U.S. and Canadian borders. With songs about oil riggers ("Roughest Neck Around") and bronco riding ("Buckin' Horse Rider") there's a lot of honkey tonk and a little outlaw for everybody, with songs ranging from romantic to raucous. The verbose Lund is as much a storyteller as he is a musician, and his stories are often surreal. With Lund's experience and unique perspective, he has found a way to lyrically and musically portray life in the rugged outbacks of the Great White North. On the CD, Lund is joined by upright bassist Kurt Ciesla and drummer Ryan Vikedal, whose name you might recognize from Nickelback.

Due to Vikedal's full-time commitment to Nickelback, Lund will be joined on tour by fellow Albertan Brady Valgardson. The Corb Lund Band will perform Wednesday at Sam Bond's in Eugene. EW

La Venexiana

Back to School Sounds

UO brings diverse music to Beall Hall.

For music lovers, back to school also means back to the UO's splendid offerings — the most diverse, accomplished, and extensive music series in Oregon. On Thursday, Oct. 9, the school's acclaimed Chamber Music Series, now in its 36th season, brings Switzerland's award-winning Amati String Quartet to Beall Concert Hall to play one of Beethoven's opus 18 quartets, Schubert's lovely "Rosamunde" quartet, and Janacek's first quartet, often called the Kreutzer Sonata.

The UO's primary purpose isn't presenting concerts. Its main mission is, of course, sponsoring generously financed, large-scale athletic events in plush surroundings catering to wealthy donors. Oops, sorry, that must be one of those big state universities in the South. What I meant to say was that the UO is actually an educational institution, and the music school offers many opportunities to learn about the world's greatest music. An hour before the concert, professor Robert Hurwitz will offer insights about the Amati program in one of his popular, free pre-concert talks geared to listeners who don't happen to have a music degree. Such opportunities abound in UO music presentations, and you can find out more about them via the Internet at music.uoregon.edu

The UO music school's contributions to the community transcend its concerts. For example, the Eugene Symphony was really born there in the mid 1960s, and its founding conductor was UO violin professor Lawrence Maves, who served on the faculty for more than four decades. Maves, who died last spring, taught nearly a thousand young string players, co-founded the Oregon String Quartet, and performed with orchestras throughout the Northwest. At 4 pm Sunday, Oct. 12, Beall hosts a free concert celebrating Maves's musical life with performances of music by Bach, Beethoven, Massenet, and more by UO music faculty members and some of Maves' former students.

One of the best shows of the season happens at Beall on Monday Oct. 13, when one of the world's great vocal ensembles, La Venexiana comes from Italy to sing music by Monteverdi, Gesualdo, Frescobaldi, and other great Renaissance composers. The free concert honors the 700th birthday of the great poet Petrarch, who could be a patron saint of Eugene, as the father of humanism and a writer who took much inspiration from mountains at a time when nature was generally more feared than celebrated. La Venexiana, which gave a fabulous show here a couple years back, will apply its sumptuous sound to musical settings of Petrarch's poetry. No lover of the human voice should miss this concert.

Of all my many musical experiences in Beall Hall, perhaps the most transcendent have come during performances by Indian musicians in the school's superb World Music Series. On Friday, Oct. 17, the WMS brings two of the most celebrated Indian classical musicians, Rajeev Taranath on sarod (plucked lute) and Abhiman Kaushal on tabla (North Indian classical drum) to Beall. This is a great opportunity to hear some of the world's most mesmerizing sounds.

We're fortunate to have so many world music ensembles based in our town. On Thursday, Oct 9, Ala Nar performs Middle Eastern music and bellydance at Luna. The group plays Arabic and Turkic music on oud and baglama (lutes), flutes, violin, bass, tabla frame drum and tambourine. And on Saturday, Oct. 11 at the Atrium (10th and Olive) the Turkish Aksent duo plays traditional and regional folk, classic, art, contemporary, and sufi music from Turkey on authentic instruments of the region.

Finally, on Tuesday, Oct. 14, the WOW hall brings Poi Dog Pondering to town. Poi Dog brought a breath of fresh air to Austin when I lived there in the late 1980s, arriving from Hawaii with breezy, danceable world-pop that sounded like no one else. The group moved to Chicago a few years later and has since played with everyone from the Dave Matthews Band to the Chicago Symphony. This is a big band featuring strings, electronics, vocals, guitars, and more, and their new album shows it finding its way back to the rich, danceable grooves that brought national acclaim a decade ago. THEATER BY KAUKAB JHUMRA SMITH

Convincing Proof

Lord Leebrick premieres Auburn work.

They say there's a fine line between genius and insanity. The sensitive, ruefully funny play Proof by David Auburn deals with the question of how to know when you've crossed it.

A brilliant mathematician, Robert (Bary Shaw), attempts an answer: If you can ask yourself "Am I crazy?" he says, then you are not. The only problem with this, points out his daughter Cathy (Jennifer Coombs), is that despite being able to question himself, Robert is insane. The wry Cathy must wrestle the demons raised by the legacy of Robert's mental illness, and his death, before she can grasp at her own future.

Sensitively directed by Craig Willis, Lord Leebrick's new artistic director, the Pulitzer-winning Proof plays out the tumultuous tide of Cathy's emotions against the calm, tree-shaded back porch of a run-down university house. The setting in the intimate Lord Leebrick Theatre places the audience literally in Cathy's leaf-littered Chicago yard.

Cathy's at a loss when her father dies: Once a gifted student, she had dropped out of school to care for him. Her emotions are stretched tight as a drum, she has no plans for the future, no means to support herself beyond her older sister's charity, and no college degree. After five years of playing parent to a father who would vacillate infuriatingly between coherent ideas and intelligent-sounding babble, she says simply, "I'm tired."

Coombs puts in a heartbreakingly vulnerable performance as Cathy, combining a complex emotional spectrum with sardonic comic timing. Conflicting emotions — insecurity, amusement, anger, pride, betrayal — flicker across Coombs' face, making her scripted lines only half of her onstage dialogue. The scenes between Coombs and Shaw are wonderful to witness, both father and daughter clearly sharing a love for each other and for mathematics, all while under the looming shadow of Robert's mental illness. Shaw's deterioration from a self-possessed professor to a shivering old man is full of pathos.

Coombs' expressive face also exposes Cathy's unease and increasing bitterness toward her older sister Claire (Valerie McMahon), and her blossoming relationship with her father's former student, Hal (Liam Drumm). When she tells Claire steadfastly about Robert, "I'm glad he's dead," Coomb's words are poignantly unconvincing.

Home for the funeral, the business-like Claire has been working in New York all the years Cathy has been at home taking care of their father. The two sisters are clearly out of sync with each other, and Coombs and McMahon use ironic pauses to great effect to show the disjoint in their relationship. Chic and cosmopolitan, Claire is the outsider in the mathematical world shared by her sister and late father, and she never really gets it. McMahon as Claire puts across a discernible bewilderment at Cathy, trying to "fix" whatever she sees. It goes to McMahon's credit that I wanted to wring her sweetly domineering neck.

So where does the title of the play come from? It refers mainly to mathematical "proofs" Robert scribbled away at in dozens of notebooks during his last mentally imbalanced years.

Hal, a young math professor and Robert's former student, thinks there may be something of value in those notebooks. Drumm plays Hal with great comic timing, an earnest math geek often speaking of the partying prowess of his kind and their rock band. But when it's time for the comedy to stop, Drumm has a harder time holding up his end of the fort. His expressions lack emotional depth, and the sexual chemistry between him and the prickly, vulnerable Cathy can be unconvincing.

As Hal combs through Robert's notebooks, Cathy's grief is mixed with fear. For Cathy is afraid that, along with inheriting Robert's mathematical genius, comes the danger that she herself may someday regress into a blithering, eloquent fool. In this poignant play, she must first convince the others around her before she can stop believing it herself.

A 2001 Pulitzer and Tony award winner, Proof appears at the Lord Leebrick Theatre through Oct. 29. EW

Vitamin G

Plant your own personal stash of garlic in October.

My goal is never to buy garlic — except when I'm away from my stash. For the last seven years, my homegrown garlic crop has spared me the humiliation of paying for something that should be free. When I do get stuck paying, it feels like I'm lying down with a prostitute.

I don't expect anyone else to share my fanaticism, but I do hope that some of you take a stab at garlic cultivation. In addition to saving — in the case of heavy users like me, a couple hundred bucks — the homegrown is by definition tastier and more rewarding. And for those who like to engage the informal economy of barter, garlic is a valuable commodity. I've currently got a deal in the works by which my garlic will be exchanged for deer meat. This is good timing, since I'm down to my last pack of venison from last year's hunt. Garlic offers the added bonus of rushing out of the gate in early April, quickly growing to knee height, while your neighbors are still hunched over their microscopic peas, carrots and spinach. You will feel like a rock star, and your neighbors will comment. When they do, pull a blade of grass (if it's tall enough), stick it in your teeth, nod your head and reflect, "Yep, crop's lookin' all right this year."

The other day I went into my garage and did a head count. Two hundred and thirty-four heads of garlic, hanging in bunches from the ceiling. That may sound like a lot, but considering how much I've already used, it's clear that between cooking, canning, bartering, gift-making and grazing housemates, I burn through more than a head of garlic every day. It needs to last until mid-May, when you can start eating the new garlic flowers. Soon after, the immature heads will be big enough to pull and eat.

Do the math. There are roughly seven and a half months from now until mid-May. Multiply seven and a half by 30 days at a bulb per day and you get 225 bulbs that I will need in order to avoid paying for it. I have 234. This leaves me in a severe garlic crisis, because it leaves me hardly any for planting.

And planting is the priority. It has to be. I need to plant enough so that next year I won't have this problem, so I'm aiming for 600 heads. One clove of garlic, planted in the fall, will grow into a head by next summer. So I need to plant 600 cloves of garlic. With my variety — Killarney Red — each head contains an average of seven plantable cloves. Six hundred heads divided by seven cloves per head equals 85 heads that I need to dedicate to planting. In order to increase the size of future generations, I plant the biggest ones. This means that from now until May I have to ration myself on 149 small and medium sized heads of garlic. I might have to pay for it.

In our climate zone, October is the month for garlic planting. The things you need to figure out ASAP are where you are going to plant, and what. The where should be an area of your garden, currently vacant, that you are willing to dedicate for nine months toward garlic. Pull out the weeds, dig it up, mix in compost and manure, and do whatever else you need to do to make it buff and ripe for planting.

The what, obviously, is garlic, but what kind? Commercial growers usually save and replant their seed most years, and then order new seed every several years to break any disease cycles that may be brewing. I recommend to home gardeners that they buy their seed at the Farmers Market. Using healthy, locally grown garlic ensures that you are going with a variety that will produce healthy offspring in your home climate. You can also get it at the store, but just make sure it's regionally grown. If you plug California garlic into an Oregon growing season, you're asking for trouble. The reverse can be true as well. It's worth experimenting with different varieties in small batches, but don't bet the farm on an alien.

The fact that you can plant store-bought garlic is a reminder that garlic, like potatoes, oysters, onions and many of the finer things in life, is a live food. This means that when you eat garlic, it is about as fresh as it gets.

When choosing your garlic, look for characteristics that are important to you. Flavor is one, obviously. Another is easy peeling. I like to be able to peel garlic like I peel my women — in one stroke. I don't have time to spend all day picking off cling-on shreds. Another important characteristic is the size and shape of the cloves. Small cloves make small heads. Big cloves — even from small heads — make big heads. I like heads in which the cloves form a symmetrical ring around a central stalk.

I highly recommend that you purchase the book Growing Great Garlic by Ron Engeland, who also sells garlic seed and gives away a wealth of information at his website: www.filareefarm.com EW

Guilt-Free Turf

Try a less than perfect lawn.

Did you let your lawn dry out and turn brown this summer? If so, now would be a good time to water it. Once the grass has greened up again, feed it with an organic lawn fertilizer. Fall feeding encourages grass to develop a good, deep root system, ensuring a strong come-back next spring and greater resistance to summer drought.

Lawns have come in for some very bad press in recent years. All through the 1990s, writers such as Michael Pollen and Sara Stein dedicated themselves to curing Americans of the lawn habit, and they made some good arguments in the process. Turfgrass offers severely limited habitat for wild things, and lawn care can be time-consuming, water-guzzling, toxic and polluting. But in order to make their case appear stronger, critics always stress the environmental costs of a perfect lawn, with little or no discussion of the most obvious and easily realized alternative: a lawn that is less than perfect.

The environmental costs of a lawn are greatly reduced as soon as you eliminate the herbicides, excessive fertilization and heavy watering that are needed to maintain a lush, weed-free, emerald green turf, and even an imperfect lawn does things that nothing else can. Mown grass is tough and self-repairing. It is also cool, soft and clean, so you can sit on it and even roll in it. If you accept the argument that the purely visual pleasures we derive from lawns (as a foil for flower beds and trees, or as a canvas for changing light and shadows) are culturally induced, maybe you can learn to live without them. But many home gardens have a real, practical need for some inviting surface that is soft yet durable enough to withstand play and foot traffic.

In a place like western Oregon, where grass grows so readily, an organically maintained lawn, weeded by hand (or not at all) and cut with a push mower, is inexpensive by any measure and it does a nice job of preventing erosion and preserving and even improving soil quality. Perhaps we should be questioning the size of our lawns and the type of turf we grow, rather than the whole concept of mown grass.

A turf of mixed grasses and broad-leafed plants lessens the urge to weed, eliminates thatch and increases drought resistance. Nichols Garden Nursery of Albany sells "ecology lawn mixes" tailored for different regions of the country. They are not, of course, tailored for your particular soil, moisture and light conditions. My own lawn was seeded seven years ago with the usual mix of perennial rye-grass and fescues, but it has evolved into a sort of custom eco-mix of air-borne grasses, prunella, clover, cowslip primroses and violets. We weed out dandelions by hand because they would take over if we didn't. The lawn looks a little uneven when it's due for a cut, but it responds very well to mowing.

Because its area is small in comparison to the surrounding perennial beds, we water our lawn in summer. This year it developed some brown patches where water failed to penetrate the heavy, easily compacted soil. Aeration and a top-dressing of mixed sand and compost would probably take care of that. Insect infestations can cause brown patches, too, but so far bugs have not bothered us. Insect and disease troubles are apparently less common in lawns maintained organically. Besides, there is strength in diversity: if one component suffers, something else moves in to take its place.

What is the formula for a guilt-free patch of turf? Start new lawns from seed. Reduce the size of the lawn so you can hand-weed it, and ignore weeds that seem to coexist with grass. If you like, you can over-sow with white clover (I/2 pound per 1,000 square feet is recommended). Clover is deep-rooting and drought resistant, and fixes nitrogen from the air. Gas-powered mowers are shocking polluters, so if you can't manage a push-mower, use an electric one. Cut high, especially in summer, and leave clippings where they fall. Water deeply and infrequently, just enough to keep the lawn green, or simply let the turf go dormant. Letting grass turn brown in summer won't kill it, although it will give dandelions an edge. Crispy brown grass will not withstand foot traffic, however, so stay off the lawn until it comes back to life.

free will astrology BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (March 21-April 19): "I've been practicing radical authenticity lately," my Aries friend Steve told me. "I'm revealing the blunt truth about unmentionable subjects to everyone I know. It's been pretty hellish — no one likes having the social masks stripped away — but it's been ultimately rewarding." I thought a minute, then said, "I admire your boldness in naming the currents flowing beneath the surface, but I'm curious as to why you imply they're all negative. To practice radical authenticity, shouldn't you also express the raw truth about what's right, good, and beautiful? Shouldn't you unleash the praise and gratitude that normally go unspoken?" Steve sneered. He thought my version of radical authenticity was wimpy. I hope you don't, Aries. You have an astrological mandate to be honest in both ways.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): One of my favorite obscure holidays is International Moment of Frustration Scream Day. Observed every October 12, it's meant to release pent-up tension resulting from the gap between what we have and what we think we want. Given the fact that your gap is particularly gaping right now, you Tauruses would especially benefit from throwing yourself into this fierce enjoyment with all your angst unfurled. The holiday's founders, Thomas and Ruth Roy, suggest that everyone should go outside sometime during the day and yell for 30 seconds. I hope the sound of you bellowing Bulls will be heard around the world.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): It looks like you're poised to put the finishing touches on something that will last a very long time — an expression or creation that will be a defining monument to your essential self. If I'm right and you're really ready, let me offer a suggestion. This masterpiece should not only reflect what's excellent and successful about you; it should also acknowledge the role that your failures have played in growing your beauty.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): This is one of those rare moments when laziness can be an asset. Fate is conspiring to rejuvenate you, and all you have to do is make sure you don't get in the way. I suggest, therefore, that you follow the advice of the Zen master who said, "Don't just do something, sit there!" I mean it, Cancerian. Empty yourself of ambitions. Burn your to-do list. Tell your monkey mind you're taking a sabbatical from its obsessive leaping and shrieking. Feel absolutely no guilt as you practice the art of making yourself a tabula rasa.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): According to author Colin Wilson, synchronicities are meaningful coincidences that are created by the unconscious mind to jar the conscious mind into a keener state of perception. They imbue us with a powerful sense that there are hidden meanings beneath the surface of everyday life; they lead us to suspect that a huge, benevolent intelligence is always working behind the scenes, weaving connections that are invisible to us in our normal state of awareness. I predict that you will be awash in synchronicities in the coming week, Leo. You will get concrete proof that everything is far more intertwined that you've ever dared to imagine.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): If you want to place yourself in alignment with the current cosmic trends, you will seek out more than the usual amount and quality of your favorite physical sensations. My advice is to compose a list of your top five, then write out a proposed plan for getting those needs met and met and met. For instance, if you normally have a massage every once in a while, arrange to have at least two in the coming week, and make sure you enlist the services of the very best masseuse or masseur you know. Use the same approach to sex, food, sleep, aromas, beautiful sights, and any other experience that thrills your body.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): "There is only one thing in the world worse than being talked about," wrote Libran Oscar Wilde, "and that is not being talked about." You won't have to worry about the latter problem in the next two weeks. The number of discussions about your character and behavior will probably exceed that of any other 14-day period in the past five years. Fortunately, the astrological indicators suggest that a relatively high percentage of the gossip flying around will be benevolent and even flattering. It will be a good time, therefore, for a marketing campaign or networking blitz.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are potentially a genius. Maybe not in the same way that Einstein and Beethoven were, but still: You possess some capacity or set of skills that is exquisitely unique. You are a work of art unlike any other that has ever lived. Furthermore, the precise instructions you need to ripen into that glorious state have always been with you, even from before you were born. In the words of psychologist James Hillman, you have a soul's code. You might also call it the master plan of your heart's deepest desire; the special mission that the Divine Wow sent you here to carry out; the blueprint that contains the secret of how to be perfectly, gracefully, unpredictably yourself. Now here's the really good news, Scorpio: You're at a turning point when you have extraordinary power to tune in to and activate untapped areas of your soul's code.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Every year the Color Marketing Group (CMG) at www.colormarketing.org issues a report that identifies the new colors coming into fashion, as well as their symbolic meaning. From their long list, I have selected the specific hues you should surround yourself with if you'd like to be in harmony with cosmic forces during the rest of 2003. 1. Lemon Meringue. "Silver flirts with gold in this zesty confection reminiscent of vintage roadsters," says CMG. 2. Shimma. "A shimmer, a shake, a lustrous flake, this pearlized metallic adds a savvy crackle to your communications." 3. Iron Ore-ange: "The influence of copper on orange creates a sophisticated background with primal undertones." 4. Exploring Khaki. "This safari green recalls rain forest moss and buried treasure."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Given how fresh and strong you've been feeling lately, you may not be in the mood to initiate a showdown with The Problem That Refused to Die. Why risk getting demoralized by that boring old energy drain when you're so peppy? I'll tell you why: You now have a new and unprecedented advantage over The Problem That Refused To Die. You may not be able to kill it off completely, but then again you might. And you will at least be able to dramatically limit its power to mess with you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): "No work is more worthwhile than to be a sign of divine joy and a fountain of divine love." So says mystic and scholar Andrew Harvey, and I fervently agree. Not everyone is cut out for such an exacting career, of course. The pay isn't great, the hours are long, and the heroes who make it their main gig rarely get the appreciation they deserve. It's best to try it out for a while on the side without quitting your day job. Having provided those caveats, Aquarius, I'm pleased to inform you that this is the best time in years for you to work hard at being a sign of divine joy and a fountain of divine love.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your flavor of the week will be ginger peach or vanilla clove or some other blend of piquant spiciness and smooth sweetness. The kitchen accessory that best symbolizes your special skills will be a thick sponge that has an abrasive surface on one side for scrubbing dirty pots. The recurring dream you're most likely to dream for the last time, triumphing forever over the past trauma that originally spawned it, is the nightmare in which you feel like a cornered animal. Your haiku of power will be "melodious struggle where the soul turns crap into fertilizer."

Homework: What image best symbolizes the love you want in your life all the time? Put that image in a prominent place in your home.
